

"Of Special Interest to Women Readers"

Cool Waters

by REX BEACH

Synopsis
Young, ambitious and efficient Donald Gird of New York, engineer and key field man for a small oil corporation, is sent into the desert heart of El Centro, Cal., to bring in paying wells in a very promising field. He takes his recent wife, Gloria, with him together they endure the scorching heat and dust in the blazing sun. Again, come the days and days to soon starts to pack luggage. Then... NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

CHAPTER V
When Fick entered their second reservation Gloria went to bed. There seemed to be nothing seriously wrong with her and in fact there was nothing the matter—except a broken heart. Race-horses are like that—they will run until their hearts break until there is not another gallon, and Gloria was from thoroughbred stock. The desert had beaten her.

A few days later Fick wired to the port for the best doctor available and the latter came up on a special locomotive. The doctor said drove out of the husband's mind all thoughts of oil, of his job, of his money and of her. One. A nurse was secured as quickly as possible and meant to take her to the hospital. Fick did not return to the well; he hung about the house, a dumb figure of suspense. Gloria no longer knew him and what she was like a frightened child, desolate and alone. Every day he came to the well and she was like a knife-thrust. He did not sleep; his eyes grew bloodshot; he ate nothing; he never left his sickbed.

The doctor and the nurse watched him covertly and more than once they found him staring off from the sick wife's lips. He wildly cursed himself and the desert.

A question of Time
Nature finally exacted toll for the way he had cheated her, and although he ached intolerably for sleep, he arrived at a condition where he could not close his eyes when he lay down his brain began to race and black fancies drove him slipping out of his bed.

One morning when the breeze from over the hills and began again to pour its hatred into the valley, the doctor told him gently as possible that the end was near and that he must prepare himself. It was necessary a question of time now, a question of hours, when the tired heart would cease to function. Gloria was in pain; further stimulants were useless, they would merely serve to hasten that inevitable moment when the weight of her lungs would prove too heavy for her feeble breath to lift.

Donald groaned. If only she would revive enough to recognize him, to give him one word, one look! He would know then that she forgave him. But for her to slip away without even a smile, a kiss, God, no!

"It isn't a case where any sort of medicine can do much good," the doctor explained. "I've had other cases like it. Nothing organically wrong, but—you understand! It's the country, I guess."

Crochet Round And Round With Laura Wheeler For a Jiffy Cloth

It's all in string—double thread and a large hook—a real jiffy crochet. Add richness to your home with this 60 inch cloth. It can be made in smaller sizes, too. Pattern 1172 contains instructions for making the cloth, an illustration of it and of stitches; materials needed; photograph of it.

Send 20 cents in coins (stamps cannot be accepted) for this pattern, to Wilson Needlecraft Dept., 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto, Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

HOT LUNCHES For School Children

Two could play that game! Big game!
He let the long, shiny torpedo slip quietly into the casing mouth so he had in mind.

McKay and his crew were awakened by a peculiar sensation; it was as if the torpedo had been lifted a few inches by the upward thrust of a thickly padded piston and was snapping.

"Hey! Who kicked my bunk?" inquired the driller as he sat up. A startled voice answered him. "That's funny! Me too. Did you fellows hear anything?"

One man had, another had not. Somebody suggested an earthquake—anything was likely to happen in this accursed country. They were eating staidly in the dark when McKay spoke with all trace of sleepiness gone from his voice.

"Hark!... My God, listen!" An instant, then he was up on the floor and the others had followed him. They stood straining, alert. At first the hub of the desert was as complete as that of a planet. From somewhere came a long, sighing exhalation, not unlike breath issuing from the lungs of an enormous being, and a man might as well look his wife in a furnace and expect her to heat herself.

Consumed by Agony
So Gloria was dying. And he had killed her. His nose and face were burning, his hands were shaking. His mental numbness was wearing off now and agony until their hearts broke until there is not another gallon, and Gloria was from thoroughbred stock. The desert had beaten her.

CHAPTER VI
When Fick entered their second reservation Gloria went to bed. There seemed to be nothing seriously wrong with her and in fact there was nothing the matter—except a broken heart. Race-horses are like that—they will run until their hearts break until there is not another gallon, and Gloria was from thoroughbred stock. The desert had beaten her.

A few days later Fick wired to the port for the best doctor available and the latter came up on a special locomotive. The doctor said drove out of the husband's mind all thoughts of oil, of his job, of his money and of her. One. A nurse was secured as quickly as possible and meant to take her to the hospital. Fick did not return to the well; he hung about the house, a dumb figure of suspense. Gloria no longer knew him and what she was like a frightened child, desolate and alone. Every day he came to the well and she was like a knife-thrust. He did not sleep; his eyes grew bloodshot; he ate nothing; he never left his sickbed.

The doctor and the nurse watched him covertly and more than once they found him staring off from the sick wife's lips. He wildly cursed himself and the desert.

A question of Time
Nature finally exacted toll for the way he had cheated her, and although he ached intolerably for sleep, he arrived at a condition where he could not close his eyes when he lay down his brain began to race and black fancies drove him slipping out of his bed.

One morning when the breeze from over the hills and began again to pour its hatred into the valley, the doctor told him gently as possible that the end was near and that he must prepare himself. It was necessary a question of time now, a question of hours, when the tired heart would cease to function. Gloria was in pain; further stimulants were useless, they would merely serve to hasten that inevitable moment when the weight of her lungs would prove too heavy for her feeble breath to lift.

Donald groaned. If only she would revive enough to recognize him, to give him one word, one look! He would know then that she forgave him. But for her to slip away without even a smile, a kiss, God, no!

"It isn't a case where any sort of medicine can do much good," the doctor explained. "I've had other cases like it. Nothing organically wrong, but—you understand! It's the country, I guess."

Crochet Round And Round With Laura Wheeler For a Jiffy Cloth

It's all in string—double thread and a large hook—a real jiffy crochet. Add richness to your home with this 60 inch cloth. It can be made in smaller sizes, too. Pattern 1172 contains instructions for making the cloth, an illustration of it and of stitches; materials needed; photograph of it.

Send 20 cents in coins (stamps cannot be accepted) for this pattern, to Wilson Needlecraft Dept., 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto, Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

Hot Lunches For School Children

Two could play that game! Big game!
He let the long, shiny torpedo slip quietly into the casing mouth so he had in mind.

McKay and his crew were awakened by a peculiar sensation; it was as if the torpedo had been lifted a few inches by the upward thrust of a thickly padded piston and was snapping.

"Hey! Who kicked my bunk?" inquired the driller as he sat up. A startled voice answered him. "That's funny! Me too. Did you fellows hear anything?"

One man had, another had not. Somebody suggested an earthquake—anything was likely to happen in this accursed country. They were eating staidly in the dark when McKay spoke with all trace of sleepiness gone from his voice.

"Hark!... My God, listen!" An instant, then he was up on the floor and the others had followed him. They stood straining, alert. At first the hub of the desert was as complete as that of a planet. From somewhere came a long, sighing exhalation, not unlike breath issuing from the lungs of an enormous being, and a man might as well look his wife in a furnace and expect her to heat herself.

Consumed by Agony
So Gloria was dying. And he had killed her. His nose and face were burning, his hands were shaking. His mental numbness was wearing off now and agony until their hearts broke until there is not another gallon, and Gloria was from thoroughbred stock. The desert had beaten her.

CHAPTER VI
When Fick entered their second reservation Gloria went to bed. There seemed to be nothing seriously wrong with her and in fact there was nothing the matter—except a broken heart. Race-horses are like that—they will run until their hearts break until there is not another gallon, and Gloria was from thoroughbred stock. The desert had beaten her.

A few days later Fick wired to the port for the best doctor available and the latter came up on a special locomotive. The doctor said drove out of the husband's mind all thoughts of oil, of his job, of his money and of her. One. A nurse was secured as quickly as possible and meant to take her to the hospital. Fick did not return to the well; he hung about the house, a dumb figure of suspense. Gloria no longer knew him and what she was like a frightened child, desolate and alone. Every day he came to the well and she was like a knife-thrust. He did not sleep; his eyes grew bloodshot; he ate nothing; he never left his sickbed.

The doctor and the nurse watched him covertly and more than once they found him staring off from the sick wife's lips. He wildly cursed himself and the desert.

A question of Time
Nature finally exacted toll for the way he had cheated her, and although he ached intolerably for sleep, he arrived at a condition where he could not close his eyes when he lay down his brain began to race and black fancies drove him slipping out of his bed.

One morning when the breeze from over the hills and began again to pour its hatred into the valley, the doctor told him gently as possible that the end was near and that he must prepare himself. It was necessary a question of time now, a question of hours, when the tired heart would cease to function. Gloria was in pain; further stimulants were useless, they would merely serve to hasten that inevitable moment when the weight of her lungs would prove too heavy for her feeble breath to lift.

Donald groaned. If only she would revive enough to recognize him, to give him one word, one look! He would know then that she forgave him. But for her to slip away without even a smile, a kiss, God, no!

"It isn't a case where any sort of medicine can do much good," the doctor explained. "I've had other cases like it. Nothing organically wrong, but—you understand! It's the country, I guess."

Crochet Round And Round With Laura Wheeler For a Jiffy Cloth

It's all in string—double thread and a large hook—a real jiffy crochet. Add richness to your home with this 60 inch cloth. It can be made in smaller sizes, too. Pattern 1172 contains instructions for making the cloth, an illustration of it and of stitches; materials needed; photograph of it.

Send 20 cents in coins (stamps cannot be accepted) for this pattern, to Wilson Needlecraft Dept., 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto, Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

Hot Lunches For School Children

Two could play that game! Big game!
He let the long, shiny torpedo slip quietly into the casing mouth so he had in mind.

McKay and his crew were awakened by a peculiar sensation; it was as if the torpedo had been lifted a few inches by the upward thrust of a thickly padded piston and was snapping.

"Hey! Who kicked my bunk?" inquired the driller as he sat up. A startled voice answered him. "That's funny! Me too. Did you fellows hear anything?"

One man had, another had not. Somebody suggested an earthquake—anything was likely to happen in this accursed country. They were eating staidly in the dark when McKay spoke with all trace of sleepiness gone from his voice.

"Hark!... My God, listen!" An instant, then he was up on the floor and the others had followed him. They stood straining, alert. At first the hub of the desert was as complete as that of a planet. From somewhere came a long, sighing exhalation, not unlike breath issuing from the lungs of an enormous being, and a man might as well look his wife in a furnace and expect her to heat herself.

Consumed by Agony
So Gloria was dying. And he had killed her. His nose and face were burning, his hands were shaking. His mental numbness was wearing off now and agony until their hearts broke until there is not another gallon, and Gloria was from thoroughbred stock. The desert had beaten her.

CHAPTER VI
When Fick entered their second reservation Gloria went to bed. There seemed to be nothing seriously wrong with her and in fact there was nothing the matter—except a broken heart. Race-horses are like that—they will run until their hearts break until there is not another gallon, and Gloria was from thoroughbred stock. The desert had beaten her.

A few days later Fick wired to the port for the best doctor available and the latter came up on a special locomotive. The doctor said drove out of the husband's mind all thoughts of oil, of his job, of his money and of her. One. A nurse was secured as quickly as possible and meant to take her to the hospital. Fick did not return to the well; he hung about the house, a dumb figure of suspense. Gloria no longer knew him and what she was like a frightened child, desolate and alone. Every day he came to the well and she was like a knife-thrust. He did not sleep; his eyes grew bloodshot; he ate nothing; he never left his sickbed.

The doctor and the nurse watched him covertly and more than once they found him staring off from the sick wife's lips. He wildly cursed himself and the desert.

A question of Time
Nature finally exacted toll for the way he had cheated her, and although he ached intolerably for sleep, he arrived at a condition where he could not close his eyes when he lay down his brain began to race and black fancies drove him slipping out of his bed.

One morning when the breeze from over the hills and began again to pour its hatred into the valley, the doctor told him gently as possible that the end was near and that he must prepare himself. It was necessary a question of time now, a question of hours, when the tired heart would cease to function. Gloria was in pain; further stimulants were useless, they would merely serve to hasten that inevitable moment when the weight of her lungs would prove too heavy for her feeble breath to lift.

Donald groaned. If only she would revive enough to recognize him, to give him one word, one look! He would know then that she forgave him. But for her to slip away without even a smile, a kiss, God, no!

"It isn't a case where any sort of medicine can do much good," the doctor explained. "I've had other cases like it. Nothing organically wrong, but—you understand! It's the country, I guess."

Crochet Round And Round With Laura Wheeler For a Jiffy Cloth

It's all in string—double thread and a large hook—a real jiffy crochet. Add richness to your home with this 60 inch cloth. It can be made in smaller sizes, too. Pattern 1172 contains instructions for making the cloth, an illustration of it and of stitches; materials needed; photograph of it.

Send 20 cents in coins (stamps cannot be accepted) for this pattern, to Wilson Needlecraft Dept., 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto, Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

Hot Lunches For School Children

Two could play that game! Big game!
He let the long, shiny torpedo slip quietly into the casing mouth so he had in mind.

McKay and his crew were awakened by a peculiar sensation; it was as if the torpedo had been lifted a few inches by the upward thrust of a thickly padded piston and was snapping.

"Hey! Who kicked my bunk?" inquired the driller as he sat up. A startled voice answered him. "That's funny! Me too. Did you fellows hear anything?"

One man had, another had not. Somebody suggested an earthquake—anything was likely to happen in this accursed country. They were eating staidly in the dark when McKay spoke with all trace of sleepiness gone from his voice.

"Hark!... My God, listen!" An instant, then he was up on the floor and the others had followed him. They stood straining, alert. At first the hub of the desert was as complete as that of a planet. From somewhere came a long, sighing exhalation, not unlike breath issuing from the lungs of an enormous being, and a man might as well look his wife in a furnace and expect her to heat herself.

Consumed by Agony
So Gloria was dying. And he had killed her. His nose and face were burning, his hands were shaking. His mental numbness was wearing off now and agony until their hearts broke until there is not another gallon, and Gloria was from thoroughbred stock. The desert had beaten her.

CHAPTER VI
When Fick entered their second reservation Gloria went to bed. There seemed to be nothing seriously wrong with her and in fact there was nothing the matter—except a broken heart. Race-horses are like that—they will run until their hearts break until there is not another gallon, and Gloria was from thoroughbred stock. The desert had beaten her.

A few days later Fick wired to the port for the best doctor available and the latter came up on a special locomotive. The doctor said drove out of the husband's mind all thoughts of oil, of his job, of his money and of her. One. A nurse was secured as quickly as possible and meant to take her to the hospital. Fick did not return to the well; he hung about the house, a dumb figure of suspense. Gloria no longer knew him and what she was like a frightened child, desolate and alone. Every day he came to the well and she was like a knife-thrust. He did not sleep; his eyes grew bloodshot; he ate nothing; he never left his sickbed.

The doctor and the nurse watched him covertly and more than once they found him staring off from the sick wife's lips. He wildly cursed himself and the desert.

A question of Time
Nature finally exacted toll for the way he had cheated her, and although he ached intolerably for sleep, he arrived at a condition where he could not close his eyes when he lay down his brain began to race and black fancies drove him slipping out of his bed.

One morning when the breeze from over the hills and began again to pour its hatred into the valley, the doctor told him gently as possible that the end was near and that he must prepare himself. It was necessary a question of time now, a question of hours, when the tired heart would cease to function. Gloria was in pain; further stimulants were useless, they would merely serve to hasten that inevitable moment when the weight of her lungs would prove too heavy for her feeble breath to lift.

Donald groaned. If only she would revive enough to recognize him, to give him one word, one look! He would know then that she forgave him. But for her to slip away without even a smile, a kiss, God, no!

"It isn't a case where any sort of medicine can do much good," the doctor explained. "I've had other cases like it. Nothing organically wrong, but—you understand! It's the country, I guess."

Crochet Round And Round With Laura Wheeler For a Jiffy Cloth

It's all in string—double thread and a large hook—a real jiffy crochet. Add richness to your home with this 60 inch cloth. It can be made in smaller sizes, too. Pattern 1172 contains instructions for making the cloth, an illustration of it and of stitches; materials needed; photograph of it.

Send 20 cents in coins (stamps cannot be accepted) for this pattern, to Wilson Needlecraft Dept., 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto, Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

Hot Lunches For School Children

Two could play that game! Big game!
He let the long, shiny torpedo slip quietly into the casing mouth so he had in mind.

McKay and his crew were awakened by a peculiar sensation; it was as if the torpedo had been lifted a few inches by the upward thrust of a thickly padded piston and was snapping.

"Hey! Who kicked my bunk?" inquired the driller as he sat up. A startled voice answered him. "That's funny! Me too. Did you fellows hear anything?"

One man had, another had not. Somebody suggested an earthquake—anything was likely to happen in this accursed country. They were eating staidly in the dark when McKay spoke with all trace of sleepiness gone from his voice.

"Hark!... My God, listen!" An instant, then he was up on the floor and the others had followed him. They stood straining, alert. At first the hub of the desert was as complete as that of a planet. From somewhere came a long, sighing exhalation, not unlike breath issuing from the lungs of an enormous being, and a man might as well look his wife in a furnace and expect her to heat herself.

Consumed by Agony
So Gloria was dying. And he had killed her. His nose and face were burning, his hands were shaking. His mental numbness was wearing off now and agony until their hearts broke until there is not another gallon, and Gloria was from thoroughbred stock. The desert had beaten her.

CHAPTER VI
When Fick entered their second reservation Gloria went to bed. There seemed to be nothing seriously wrong with her and in fact there was nothing the matter—except a broken heart. Race-horses are like that—they will run until their hearts break until there is not another gallon, and Gloria was from thoroughbred stock. The desert had beaten her.

A few days later Fick wired to the port for the best doctor available and the latter came up on a special locomotive. The doctor said drove out of the husband's mind all thoughts of oil, of his job, of his money and of her. One. A nurse was secured as quickly as possible and meant to take her to the hospital. Fick did not return to the well; he hung about the house, a dumb figure of suspense. Gloria no longer knew him and what she was like a frightened child, desolate and alone. Every day he came to the well and she was like a knife-thrust. He did not sleep; his eyes grew bloodshot; he ate nothing; he never left his sickbed.

The doctor and the nurse watched him covertly and more than once they found him staring off from the sick wife's lips. He wildly cursed himself and the desert.

A question of Time
Nature finally exacted toll for the way he had cheated her, and although he ached intolerably for sleep, he arrived at a condition where he could not close his eyes when he lay down his brain began to race and black fancies drove him slipping out of his bed.

One morning when the breeze from over the hills and began again to pour its hatred into the valley, the doctor told him gently as possible that the end was near and that he must prepare himself. It was necessary a question of time now, a question of hours, when the tired heart would cease to function. Gloria was in pain; further stimulants were useless, they would merely serve to hasten that inevitable moment when the weight of her lungs would prove too heavy for her feeble breath to lift.

Donald groaned. If only she would revive enough to recognize him, to give him one word, one look! He would know then that she forgave him. But for her to slip away without even a smile, a kiss, God, no!

"It isn't a case where any sort of medicine can do much good," the doctor explained. "I've had other cases like it. Nothing organically wrong, but—you understand! It's the country, I guess."

Crochet Round And Round With Laura Wheeler For a Jiffy Cloth

It's all in string—double thread and a large hook—a real jiffy crochet. Add richness to your home with this 60 inch cloth. It can be made in smaller sizes, too. Pattern 1172 contains instructions for making the cloth, an illustration of it and of stitches; materials needed; photograph of it.

Send 20 cents in coins (stamps cannot be accepted) for this pattern, to Wilson Needlecraft Dept., 73 West Adelaide St., Toronto, Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

Ocean Air Service Probable In 1939

Large Flying-Beats Will Be Made By Spring, Says E. Official

Sunday-School Lesson

LESSON XIII
David: Triumphant Faith—Psalms 23 and 27
Psalms 23 and 27
Psalms 23 and 27
Psalms 23 and 27

Next spring should see a transatlantic air service linking London and Britain on something like a commercially profitable basis, said E. K. Woods, Humphrey, former managing director of the Imperial Airways, who arrived in Canada last week.

Mr. Humphrey declared that Imperial Airways now had four large flying boats similar in type to the Catalina and the Cambria, which made several crossings of the Atlantic last year, via Boston, Newfoundland.

To Carry Larger Loads
"That these boats are strengthened and will be able to carry larger loads," he said. "Beyond these are three other flying boats, which will be ready by spring. They form the backbone of the Catalina stretched out, lengthened and widened. They will really be able to carry a 100-ton load."

Mr. Humphrey's real love, however, is the Mercury, pick-back airplane, which made one non-stop trip this summer from Foyes, in Erie, to Montreal, carrying with it a 1,000-pound load of mail and explosives.

"That composite craft, the Mercury combination, is one of the greatest inventions in aviation," he declared.

Swiss Cattle Outlive Most Dairy Type Is Praised—Also Bring Good Beef Price

Because of their longevity, Brown Swiss dairy cattle bid fair to displace other breeds in various milk producing centres of the world, according to a report by the Michigan State Fair.

Most Brown Swiss cows will produce milk which tests from 4 to 6 per cent butterfat, and when a cow is sold there has been received as much as $94 for a cow which was 19 years old. I got the record for a cow that had a year ago.

Protection and Comfort
The foggy film which appears on wood surfaces in warm damp weather can be washed away with a clean cloth, mild warm soap or warm water and a soft oil soap. Work quickly and over a small section, rinsing with a cloth wrung from clear warm water, and drying thoroughly with a soft clean cloth. Then apply polish or wax and rub to a gloss.

Mapping Moon
Amateur Spends 4 Years On Job and It's Only Half Finished

For four years H. Percy Wilkins, a Welsh engineer, has been engaged in mapping the moon, and it is only half finished.

For amusement Wilkins is working on a 25-foot map of the moon, a task that has led him to believe there is a lunar law of vegetation on the earth's apparently dead satellite.

"Fungus On Its Face"
Among rugged, unweathered mountain peaks, some of which rise higher than Everest, astronomer have spotted dark patches which move along the moon's face.

Personally, I think they are some sort of fungus, the dark damp spots," says Wilkins. "There are other things that lead me to believe that there are traces of moisture and some slight atmosphere on the surface of the moon. Life, may be, but human life, decidedly not."

Wolves Worried
Bruce County Depredations of Pack Becoming Serious Problem—Six Wolves Searched in One Group; Sheep and Deer Falling Victims

WINGHAM—Although Kintosa Township officials blamed dogs for killing sheep in the Bruce County township, as they raised the bounty on sheep-killing dogs, definite proof is being shown these days that wolves are guilty.

Harvey Stanley and Gordon Scott have bagged two wolves, one of the timber variety and the other a grey wolf, and have taken them to Walkerton to claim the bounty. A month ago a mail carrier saw a wolf slinking toward a section of bush and fired a shot at it.

Wolf Hunters Miss Organize James Eldon, commercial traveller, saw what he says were six wolves last week at dusk in a field he was driving through near Lucknow. He was a former resident of Northern Manitoba, and says there could be no mistake but that they were really wolves, and he believes they have come south to follow the deer.

Meanwhile, the Kintosa Township residents, who have become alarmed at the increasing number of wolves in the district, are seriously considering an organized wolf hunt. The main trouble now seems to be that there are no men here who are qualified to be considered as wolf hunters.

Latest Hair Style—Like Mother Wore It!

Accidental Crocoring of Dahlia and Scabious Develops Striking Blossom

New Flower Grown Unlike Any Other

Yorkshire, England, has developed a flower unlike any other in the world, a dahlia with a striking resemblance to a scabious and has the characteristics of both. It was first seen in 1928 in the garden of Mrs. Frank Atkinson's garden at Patey Bridge, and since then the blooms have increased in size and beauty and now this new flower is singularly fine.

It is very large and has bright red petals surrounding a centre of tightly packed miniature trumpet with yellow stamens. It grows about 15 inches high, about 100 plants have been reared from the original freak flower.

Surpasses Quota Of Octogenarians
Six Percent of the Population Of Ethel, Ontario, Are Over 80

The small village of Ethel, near Wingham, Ontario, with a population of 145 has the unique distinction of having one out of every six octogenarians.

Most of them, six women and three men, have lived there or in the nearby townships since the village was first settled in 1828. The oldest continuous resident is Mrs. J. M. Henry, who was born in 1808 and is now 87 years of age, going to Ethel at the age of 15 months. Mr. and Mrs. Henry have heard Monday's news of their married couple, having been married for more than sixty-three years.

Arrangements have been completed by CBS to continue into the fall and winter the current hour weekly broadcasts by Orson Welles and his "Mercury Theatre of the Air." The series, now heard Mondays, will shift to Sundays.

STAR-STUDDED PROGRAM
Texas Star Theatre, a new star-studded program to feature such outstanding theatrical personalities as Adolphe Menjou, Uta Hagen, Charles Bickel, James Cagney, Françoise Rosay, Max Reinhardt and his newly-organized "Workshop," David Brokman's orchestra and Jimmy Wallington, all under the personal direction of Bill Backus, will make its debut on the nationwide WABC-Columbia network Wednesday, October 15, at 9:30-10:30 p.m. EST. Returns for the air Sunday, October 2, at 9:00 a.m. EST. Although Power has been off the air since early summer, he has been making pictures continuously and will have his first vacation of the year while Boyer broadcasts.

Power will return to the program with the broadcast of Sunday, January 1, 1939. The dramatic serial, "The Lone Wolf," will be replaced by "The Lone Wolf" for three months when that NBC-Blue Network program returns to the air Sunday, October 2, at 9:00 a.m. EST. Although Power has been off the air since early summer, he has been making pictures continuously and will have his first vacation of the year while Boyer broadcasts.

CHARLES BOYER'S DEBUT
Charles Boyer, dramatic star of the screen, will replace Tyrone Power as leading man of the Hollywood Playhouse for three months when that NBC-Blue Network program returns to the air Sunday, October 2, at 9:00 a.m. EST. Although Power has been off the air since early summer, he has been making pictures continuously and will have his first vacation of the year while Boyer broadcasts.

Power will return to the program with the broadcast of Sunday, January 1, 1939. The dramatic serial, "The Lone Wolf," will be replaced by "The Lone Wolf" for three months when that NBC-Blue Network program returns to the air Sunday, October 2, at 9:00 a.m. EST. Although Power has been off the air since early summer, he has been making pictures continuously and will have his first vacation of the year while Boyer broadcasts.

JOE E. BROWN TO STAR
Joe E. Brown, tanned-mouthed laugh-provoker of stage and screen, will voice his mad antics over the airwaves as starring comedian in a new half-hour comedy script program to be inaugurated on the Columbia network Sunday, October 2, at 9:00 a.m. EST. Although Power has been off the air since early summer, he has been making pictures continuously and will have his first vacation of the year while Boyer broadcasts.

Power will return to the program with the broadcast of Sunday, January 1, 1939. The dramatic serial, "The Lone Wolf," will be replaced by "The Lone Wolf" for three months when that NBC-Blue Network program returns to the air Sunday, October 2, at 9:00 a.m. EST. Although Power has been off the air since early summer, he has been making pictures continuously and will have his first vacation of the year while Boyer broadcasts.

Power will return to the program with the broadcast of Sunday, January 1, 1939. The dramatic serial, "The Lone Wolf," will be replaced by "The Lone Wolf" for three months when that NBC-Blue Network program returns to the air Sunday, October 2, at 9:00 a.m. EST. Although Power has been off the air since early summer, he has been making pictures continuously and will have his first vacation of the year while Boyer broadcasts.

Power will return to the program with the broadcast of Sunday, January 1, 1939. The dramatic serial, "The Lone Wolf," will be replaced by "The Lone Wolf" for three months when that NBC-Blue Network program returns to the air Sunday, October 2, at 9:00 a.m. EST. Although Power has been off the air since early summer, he has been making pictures continuously and will have his first vacation of the year while Boyer broadcasts.

Power will return to the program with the broadcast of Sunday, January 1, 1939. The dramatic serial, "The Lone Wolf," will be replaced by "The Lone Wolf" for three months when that NBC-Blue Network program returns to the air Sunday, October 2, at 9:00 a.m. EST. Although Power has been off the air since early summer, he has been making pictures continuously and will have his first vacation of the year while Boyer broadcasts.

&lt;