Lump of Sugar Can't Be Tasted

Before we can taste anything, it tasted as long as it is in solid form. To test this, wipe your tongue dry and place some sugar on it. You can taste nothing un-til the saliva comes to dissolve the sugar. Try the same test with salt. Even in dissolved form, there are only four things we can taste: sweetness, sourness, salti-ness and bitterness. All other things which we think we taste, we merely smell. Flavors are smelled, not tasted.

II-Meeting the Boys

"Nicest teeth I've ever seen, Pee-wee."

Whitey is introduced to everyone in the Town and immediately takes a dislike to Mo Kahn (Sidney Miller) whom he accuses of poking his big nose into things. Whitey sneers at everything, particularly at the appealing statue of the boy at the gates who represents the generous spirit of the place. He hasn't the heart to be mean to little Pee-wee but simply ignores him.

Father Flanagan calls Whitey into his office that afternoon and casually asks him what he thinks of the place whitey tells him flatly that he's on his way any time. Father Flanagan challenges the statement, informing Whitey that he has a hunch statement and an accounting is called for. But Father Flanagan takes care of he's going to scant to stay there. But secretly he is uneasy. If Whitey should go, he will be the first by that he has ever lost.

Whitey is walking toward the big gates when Father Flanagan sees him from his office window. He thinks fast. Suddenly he runs out, and orders
