Presentation

(Orange Valley Corr.)

On Monday evening a large circle of friends of Orange Valley, Spring Hill and Markdale gathered in Markdale Orange Hall in honour of Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Talbot, who were recently married, and presented them with a miscellaneous shower. At 11.30 the newlyweds were seated and Mrs. Littlejohns read the address while Miss Gladys McFadden and Miss Ella Stephenson unwrapped the gifts and Miss Shirley Semple read the verses and names of the givers. Mr. and Mrs. Talbot replied in well chosen words thanking all present for the tokens and good wishes. Lunch was served at this time and a short program was sponsored by the Douglas trio and Mr. Norman Hartley, Jr. Dancing was then resumed. Following is the address:

Markdale, April 17th, 1939
Mr. and Mrs. Jno. Talbot:

On this occasion of your marriage we, your friends and associates, deem it a pleasure to assemble here tonight to wish you both happiness and prosperity in the bright future that lies before you.

Since childhood, Velma, it has been a pleasure to know you in genial friendship and on social occasions, to which you have contributed abundantly.

John, to you, who is a stranger to most of us, we congratulate you upon your choice in picking a partner for life, but John, we sincerely hope your fate will not be as the one pictured in this little poem, entitled "AS HIS MOTHER USED TO DO".

He criticised her pudding and he found fault with her cake;

He wished she'd make such biscuits as his mother used to make;

She didn't wash the dishes and she didn't make a stew;

Nor even mend his socks, like his mother used to do.

His mother had six children, but by night her work was done;

His wife seemed always drugging tho' she only had the one.

His mother always was well dressed, his wife might do so too;

If she would only manage as his mother used to do.

Ah well! she was not perfect, tho' she tried to do her best;

Until at last she thought her time had come to have a rest:

So when, one day, she went the same old rigmorale all through,

She turned him up and spanked him like his mother used to do.

We ask you both to accept these gifts, as slight tokens of our esteem and good will. And in conclusion, we join in wishing you both that God's blessing may rest upon you through many years of happily wedded life.

Signed on behalf of your friends and associates, Miss Ina Bradley, Mrs. Gordon Hill, Mrs. G. W. Littlejohns.

Ken Goheen Gives Classification Talk

Since my classification is Education—Secondary, I am going to discuss briefly the purpose of education, and some of the efforts that have and are being made to achieve that purpose, with emphasis on the work of Secondary or High Schools.

In order to chart a course, and to evaluate results, it is necessary to have a goal, an objective. In education we have many definitions of our goal. Every educator formulates his own—and educators in a democracy are as numerous as pupils, for reasons which we will see. But the gratifying feature of this large number of definitions is the fact that they boil down to a few essentials, common to all. We are really unanimous upon the purpose then. It may be stated in a few words, but its possibility of elaboration is already answered for yourselves, "A Good Life". Or, since living should teach us to live; since we demand progress in our lives, as compared to the lives of past generations; our demand is really that education should provide us with the means of living "A Better Life".

Now it is the individual interpretation of the phrase "A Good Life" that leads to the great variety of definitions of the purpose of education. We want better health, more money, more comforts at home and at work, more leisure time, more activities for our leisure, more knowledge and skills general and specialized, more cooperation in the community, nation, and the world, and a broader spiritual outlook, a deeper understanding. This is a large order but educators are facing it as they have from the beginning of time. The progress made in the past is an indication of what the future holds.

The purpose of education has never changed, never will change while we live in a progressive society. The interpretation of this purpose varies with the individual, with the age. In the same way our efforts to reach the goal must correspond to the varying emphasis placed upon the interpretation of our purpose.

The school is an important part in our efforts to attain the good life, but education is a continuous process, continuing as long as we persist in our pursuit of the ideal. The school carries on the process begun in the home, and projects, not a finished product, not a veteran of life but a raw cadet, into this battle for the Good Life. To be successful in his fight the cadet must be strong enough to survive, intelligent enough to learn, to continue his education. To carry the analogy further, the school is the training ground. Here the recruit learns that life is not easy, that it demands effort, cooperative action, self-discipline, obedience to authority, drill in certain fundamentals, a knowledge of and skill in the use of weapons, and, above all, self-reliance, development of the art of independent judgment, after a survey of all the pertinent facts.

The generally accepted fundamentals of education are three: reading, including comprehension; expression of ideas, encompassing correct speaking and writing; and calculation, sufficient for general purposes. Beyond this stretches the whole immeasurable field of human knowledge and skills, but it is generally agreed that every future citizen of the land should have some knowledge of the development of society and the responsibilities of a citizen to that society. This is supplied in the Health and Social Study courses. In addition to these is recommended a general appreciative survey of Latin, French, and Science, which, besides other values, helps further an understanding of our present environment.

In acquiring this information the student has been trained in the fundamental attitudes, and at the same time his natural abilities have been developed. With these skills and items of information in his possession the student is ready to make a choice of his own particular vocation and from this time on his education is directed towards the attainment of the specialized knowledge and skills required by his chosen occupation.

Fifty years ago High Schools were concerned only with training for the professions. Training for other occupations was received "on the job". Now the demand is that all sorts of vocational training be given.

The implications of this demand are slowly being recognized—the extension of the curriculum, special courses, equipment and plant, together with methods of financing and administering a vastly enlarged system. The cities are leading the way, but democracy pre-supposes equal opportunity for all, and the problem is to provide these opportunities for rural districts.

With curriculum changes are coming changes in methods of instruction. The pupil is not a vessel into which information is poured. "How to think", rather than "what to think", spells the difference between democratic and dictatorial educational systems. This training is our only guarantee that "it can't happen here."

Nor are pupils identical substances, but individuals with definite characteristics and differing latent abilities to be developed for the various demands of a complex society.

I have tried to indicate to you the tremendous scope of our educational problem. Only a fraction of it belongs to the school. Upon its solution depends our welfare, our democratic institutions, in fact our very survival. Thus it becomes the responsibility of every citizen of this country, and particularly of those pledged to "Service".

Chris. Irwin Passes Tuesday

Some years later he took up bricklaying and followed that line of work for a number of years. When about 30 years of age he returned to the home farm, where he continued to live and farm successfully. He was widely known, though a man of retiring disposition who took no part in public affairs. He was a kind and good neighbor, ever ready to help when help was needed.

Miss Macphail, M.P., Writes from Ottawa

We make progress, if slowly. Impatient people like me get worn ragged working and waiting for the obviously necessary things to be done. And, yet, in the House of Commons this week two matters were dealt with in a way which must bring joy to the reformer's heart.

For some years, Mr. J. S. Woodsworth has introduced a Bill which sought to protect workers from intimidation or discrimination on the part of employers in cases where the worker wished to join a trade union and work for the benefit of himself and his fellows through it. To begin with, the House of Commons showed but little sympathy with the subject matter of the Bill but year after year the support increased, culminating this year in acceptance of the purport of it by the Minister of Justice, the Rt. Hon. Ernest Lapointe.

By changes in the Criminal Code, intimidation of workers by their employers, insofar as it is constitutionally possible. In the exact words of the Code: "Any employer or his agent, who wrongfully or without lawful authority refuses to employ or dismiss from his employment any person for the sole reason that such person is a member of a lawful trade union or of a lawful association or combination of workmen or employees formed for the purpose of advancing in a lawful manner their interests and organize for their protection in the regulation of wages and conditions of work or seeks by intimidation, threat . . . to compel workmen or employees to abstain from belonging to . . . trade unions . . . associations or combinations to which they have a lawful right to belong or conspires with others to do these things is liable to conviction. The penalty is a fine not exceeding $100.00 or three months in jail, unless the company is a corporation, in which case the fine may be $1,000.00."

Even yet, to make an airtight case against an employer will be a difficult matter, but certainly the changes will give the workers great moral support and is, as Mr. Mackenzie King himself would say "A step in the right direction."

The second matter which comes under the head of progress is of very far-reaching importance but it is as yet in the initial stages. It has to do with the abolition of appeals to the Privy Council in Great Britain, making thereby the Supreme Court of Canada the last court of appeal. Last year the Hon. C. H. Cahan, a Conservative member for a Montreal seat and an eminent lawyer, introduced the subject of the prohibition of appeals to the Privy Council. In support of his contention he made a masterly presentation of facts, showing that over a long period the decisions made by the Privy Council had tended to lessen the powers of the federal government and strengthen the powers of the provinces, thereby frustrating the intent of the fathers of confederation. At that time he was given a good deal of support, but the Minister of Justice, who personally agreed with Mr. Cahan, thought that time to study the matter should be given before it was carried further.

Now a whole year has passed and Mr. Cahan has again introduced the Bill. At once, Mr. Lapointe said that the government would take the responsibility of asking the Supreme Court of Canada and probably the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in London whether or not the Dominion Parliament is competent to enact a statute prohibiting appeals. Although he had no personal doubt as to the power of Parliament in this regard, he believed there were some who had, and before proceeding further with the legislation the doubt should be removed.

Mr. Cahan used this significant sentence: "The more free the people of Canada are from the officious intervention in our domestic affairs by the government of the United Kingdom, the more readily will our people assume and fulfill the duties and responsibilities which are implied in our continued membership in the British Commonwealth."

It is particularly fortunate that an outstanding Conservative and imperialist, whose loyalty cannot be questioned, is urging that Canada assume full nation-hood in regard to courts. The Liberal party can now give him every assistance and yet keep their loyalty beyond reproach, which, in our oddly constituted country, would hardly have been possible had the Liberals taken the initiative.

Denton Massey made a four hour speech on unemployment, in which he mercilessly criticised the policy and the actions of the Hon. Norman Rogers, Minister of Labour; charged that thousands of transients had died from "exposure, illness, starvation and lack of care," and made eleven (Continued on page eight.)

Mrs. A. G. Chisholm

Mrs. Archie G. Chisholm, who was injured in an accident on No. 19 highway, south of Chatsworth on April 6th, passed away in the Owen Sound Hospital Friday morning April 14, as the result of her injuries. The late Mrs. Chisholm was fatally hurt when thrown from the buggy in which she and her husband, their grandson and another Chatsworth boy were riding. The vehicle was struck by a car driven by Lawrence Legate of Chatsworth, who is held on the charge of failing to return to the scene of an accident.

The deceased was 72 years of age and a lifelong resident of Holland Township, where she had a wide circle of friends and participated in church and community activities. Her maiden name was Elvira Merriam and she was born in Holland Township, a daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Merriam. In 1899 she was married to Archie G. Chisholm. For many years they lived on the fourth concession of Holland. About ten years ago they moved within a mile of the village of Chatsworth on Highway 10.

The late Mrs. Chisholm is survived by her husband, 82 years of age, who was also injured in the tragic accident and has been very ill at his home ever since. Two daughters and two sons also mourn her sudden death, namely Mrs. Howard Mitchell of Toronto; Mrs. George McLaughlan of Chatsworth; T. A. Chisholm of Mimico and Elmer J. Chisholm of Ingersoll. A daughter, Mrs. J. Black, predeceased her about eight years ago. A brother, Harvey Merriam of Tara, and two sisters, Mrs. Foster of Manitoba and Mrs. Harrison of North Dakota, also survive. One brother, Fred Merriam, was killed overseas. A grandson, John Black, who was a passenger in the buggy at the time of the accident, made his home with Mr. and Mrs. Chisholm.

The late Mrs. Chisholm will be widely mourned. She was a member of the Presbyterian Church and very active in the Arnett branch of the Women's Institute.
