The Function Of The Reporter

A reporter is of necessity an impersonal observbe noticed that he doesn't applaud when a speaker makes some remarks that please the audience. He doesn't join in the program, unless it is to stand when the national anthem is sung. He is merely an onlooker and is reporting the course of events, not for the benefit of those at the meeting but for reason why". That phrase adequately describes the reporter's attitude toward any assignment he is called upon to cover. He should not be expect-

> A reporter recently covered a temperance meeting and was asked to express his opinion on the liquor question. This he declined to do, and rightly so because he was attending the meeting as a representative of his newspaper and not as a member of the Temperance Federation.

Newspaper reporters are often asked to keep things out of the paper, or to soft pedal on some news item. The conscientious reporter will never make any promises to do this. This is the prerogative of the editor only, and the only thing a reporter can do is take the matter up with his editor. Sometimes a bribe is offered, and if one really wants to earn the ill-will of a reporter this is the surest way to do it. The newspaperman who accepts a bribe is breaking faith with his profession, and he never remains a newspaperman very long.

Reporters have a very difficult job. They are surrounded by people who want special favours that he has not the power to grant. In practically every instance the reporter is worthy of tho fullest confidence. He is a hard working person who is trying to play the game, trying to serve is community, and his finding his satisfaction in life, not from the ordinary pleasures of life, but from following the most fascinating calling known to mankind.

When one is tempted to invite a reporter to forget his code of ethics, it is well to remember that he is no power to assure you of immunity from publicity or of special consideration. That responsibility rests solely with the editor. Nover blame a reporter for what appears in your newsing the job he is paid for. The who decided the issues.
