

Synopsis of Preceding Chapters As Anne Eliot steps from the stage coach on Blanco's broad Main street, there is a pistol shot. Jim Silcott's hat is whisked from his red head, but the editor of the "Powder Horn Sentinel" recovers it before running lightly to the doorway of an adobe house. Buck Sneve, a Hat T rider, levels his gun again but he drops dead an instant before the door closes be-hind Silcott. This gun play had followed Sneve's appearance in the Trail's End with his foreman, Jud Prentiss, and three other Hat T riders, Jud dragging with him Jesse Lamprey. Jud had accused Jesse of double-crossing Russell Mosely, his employer, in connection with the Armijo land-grant feud. Jesse's younger brother Phil had entered and refused to leave without Jesse and when Jud was about to hit him, Silcott, waiting for a game of poker, ask-ed if Mosely's orders included beating up the boy. Jud warned Jim that he was courting trouble and turned to ply his quirt on Jesse till he dropped writhing to the floor. The Hat T riders then left and lay in wait for Silcott. Anne Eliot is the niece of Carl Rogers, editor of the "Sentinel," and it was after he was shot from ambush for opposing Mosely in the land-grant feud, that Silcott took over the job. Ma Russell, Anne's boarding-house keep-er, gets Rufe Jelks to take Anne to the "Sentinel" office. As they walk she tells Rufe that she in herited the "Sentinel" from Rogers, her uncle. Silcott had written her that Rogers had died but when Rufe tells her he was murdered, she says Jim must leave; she can't be responsible for his

The Housewife's Chief Aversions

Fresh Grocery Clerks Who Have Little Knowledge of the Goods They're Selling Are The Pet "Hate" of Feminine

Fresh grocery clerks, dusty cans nd untidy floors are the chie aversion of the average housewife insofar as purchasing of daily su plies is concerned, according to Edwin P. Geauque, of Chicago, representative of the United States National Grocers' School Mr. Gean

"We have found that the aveage woman shopper delights in fresh, clean paint, bright lights, a wide variety of stock and a generally clean store. They insist manner. Familiarities from the grocer which may cause emba rassment, are taboo with the house-wife."

Share With Them

The best way for a mother impart a love of music to her children is to share with them her enjoyment of it, writes Hazel Grigg, noted concert planist.

Listening constantly to music in the home usually produces a fondness for it. It may be music which doesn't demand conscious which doesn't demand conscious listening, music on the radio, or even on phonographs — while a meal is going on, or after going to bed at nights, or while reading. Or it may be conscious listening — and there should be a balance between the two—to music which the which the should be a balance of the should be a balance. the mother herself carefully and unobtrusively chooses to appeal to her children.

For music appreciation doesn't just happen. It is not enough for a mother to want her children to enjoy music and to become musical. She must carefully plan ways to present music to them ways to present music to them. And to do this, she herself should And to do this, she herself should know something about music. If she does not, she may read, study and consult music educators as to the best approach.

tional capacity. A wise mother will see to it that her young child hears music which mirrors his per sonal interest and experience

Mothers should encourage as much as possible the child's active participation in music. This may take the form of singing at home, in school or in the church, dancing at home, or playing an instru-ment. Toy drums, toy bugles and toy flutes are all inexpensive enough for any parent to afford, If there are several children, the mother may suggest the for-mation of a family orchestra, usmothers have even found it well worth their time and effort to take up the study of a major instrument, such as the piano, with their
