The Farmer and The Food

(The Creemore Star)

The attempt to control prices sounds fine and looks good on paper somehow or other the whole thing is one terrible muddle. We are especially thinking about prolucts of our own district such as beef, butter, pork, etc. Knowing omething about farming we can see where the Wartime Prices and Trade Board was much lacking in knowledge of the farmers' problem Otherwise the present muddle might have been averted.

There is nothing in the world that will boost production like good prices. The present prices are not high enough to induce farmers work double shifts, etc.

In a factory, production can be inreased overnight by speeding up machinery, adding more helpers, But on a farm it is necessary to plan increased production from one to two years in advance. For instance, if the price of butter at present wa increased to one dollar a pound there would be no appreciable in crease in supply until more cows were raised and this would take a least a year. The beef cattle situation is as it is because the farme have been promised better prices in the early spring. Feed is plentiful and why wouldn't the farmers hold back to profit by increased price and weight? The conscription of all labour vould have been the easiest solution to the whole problem. Labourers or war work today are making far more money than the farmers are. In fact many farmers' sons quit farming to enter the factories. Far mers' daughters who, under ordinary circumstances, would be milking cows, are flocking to war work factories where the remuneration is two or three times what they could earn on the farms. Even a blind man can see there is a reason for the falling off in production and the reason is that farming is not, under present conditions, offering suitable induce ment for an all-out effort. For comparison, let us look back to the fourth year of the last war. The farmers were prosperous. Farme were in demand. Old farmers were to buy farms. Today we see no demand for farms. Nobody wants on forced to make the best of the situ ation as it exists. As we see it now, the situation o food supply is likely to be much worse next year unless more helpers are put on the farms and prices of farm products are moved consider ably higher.
