Canadian Workers And State Socialism

Speaking in Montreal a few weeks ago, Mr. C. McLaughlin, who knows as much about labor and industrial matters as any man in this country, said a thing that Canadian workers might well ponder. It was that trade unionism could only function in a system of free enterprise.

The truth of this is so obvious, the wonder is that some Canadian labor leaders, allying themselves with a frankly socialistic party like the C.C.F., do not seem to see it, comments the Ottawa Journal.

Under socialism, with the State running everything and controlling everything, workers would be, in effect, the wards of the State. Not then would they take their orders from their union leaders; they would take them from the State bureaucrats — from people who would tell them when to work, where to work and under what wages they should work.

That is what happened under the National Socialism of HITLER; what happened under the particular brand of socialism under MUSOLINI. It is what must happen — if socialism is to function — under State Socialism anywhere.

The bet of our labor leaders on this continent know this; it has been expressed only recently in words of the utmost clarity by men like WILLIAM GREEN, president of the American Federation of Labor. It is time that it became known to some of our C.I.O. or C.C.L. chieftains here in Canada, with their talk of a C.C.F.-labor alliance.
