Stanley was looking at her, hopelessly perplexed expression on his face. "Woman, I certainly am taking you on faith. You either greet your guest and your sister wearing an engagement ring after you have broken your engagement, which, my dear, just isn't done. Or you greet them properly engaged, then through a process of mental telepathy Maxine says he hasn't been around and you say he is out of town you break the engagement. And that, my dear, just can't be done. But you don't look queer," he added judiciously. "You look plain grand. I knew that yesterday when I met you on the road, and I when I mer you on the toda, and for it than we were a week ago. The tractor has gone to its home in the driving shed until spring shall come again. And that is really something. We began to think the fall ploughing would never get done with the ground so dry as it has been. Certainly it wouldn't have been done had we been obliged to depend on the horses. Weather conditions are different in England. We had a letter yesterday which said — "It is such a wet, miserable autumm—so dreadful for the bembed-out people in London". It also added—"G—is getting fly-bombs now". "G—" is that part of England where both Partner and I were born and raised."
