Allies' Greatest Hoax Of War

Strips Of Tinfoil Dropped By Allied Planes Jammed Nazi Radio Communications

Where was the German Luitwaffe on the night before the-European invasion? The question has been asked but not answered, many a time since that day, June 6, 1944, when a trethat day, June 6, 1943, when a ter-mendous Allied fleet put ashore in Normandy—the greatest invasion force in all history, writes a corre-spondent of the Christian Science Ionitor. The men who manned the ships and the soldiers who waded ashore each thought it a very important question. There were Luftwaffe units in the area, and the query still per-sists. What were they doing, and where were they?

The answer given to the public recently for the first time, hands a well-deserved accolade to a small, little-known, but extremely hardworking group of airmen.
From planes loaded with 9d n4
Planes Loaded With "Window"

From air stations in the Midlands and north of England on that and north of England on that never-to-be-forgotten night, 30 air-craft took off into the fast-growing darkness loaded with "window." "Window" is the code name applied to a thin metallic strip of foil, the same kind of tinfoil used on chewing gum anad candy wrappers be-fore the war. This foil was cut into thin strips and packaged, sever-al thousand strips to a bundle weighing two ounces. "Chaff" when thrown from a plane has the same effect on a radar scope as the planitself. A number of these loosed successively in the air causes the real targets to become indis-tinguishable, and the effect can best likened to an electrical smoke

These 30 planes rendezvoused over the coast of England, across from Calais. Flying at an altitude an air-borne mission toward France, they threw out their "chaff." The copes of the German radar warning net registered a great fleet of aircraft coming, and the Luftwaffe vas ordered to intercept.

The Royal Air Force planes dreled the area in which the German fighters were waiting, and with special transmitters jammed ground the Germans in the air until out o gas, preventing their diversion to the actual invasion point. Allied planes flew over naval vessels, dropping "chaff" which gave the same effect on German scopes as a co-ordinated naval invasion armada 'All this was carried on around the Calais area, while the real invasion force went somewhere else!

Thus it was that a successful feint was made through the use of radar countermeasures and the first phase of the greatest invasion feat In military history was on its way without mishap.

Princess Elizabeth A Very Human Girl

Her Royal Highness Princess Elizabeth has taken another step toward full adult status by going toward full adult status by going on her first after-theatre supper party, unattended except by the other youthful members of her party, relates the Windsor Star. The picture of this young woman dancing until past midnight in a public restaurant is an appealing one. It means something to Briton all over the world.

In few monarchies could such a recious personage go about so un protected and in such perfect safetries would want to do so. The sheltered little Princess is growing up into a very human young wo man, and every such incident i her career brings her closer to the hearts of her people.
