

KING OF THE HERD

This great bull elk got his jaw caught in a tin can while trying to get at some food in the bottom. The tin couldn't be removed and Ernie Young, Banff park warden, here with the elk, was forced to shoot the animal, which would have starved otherwise. Note the fine antlers on the elk.

Turn in Strikes

A sudden improvement in the United States labor situation came last week. Throughout the nation an estimated 1,650,000 workers were on strike and other walkouts were threatened. The crisis had seemed to be deepening. Then, at the end of the week, agreement was reached on three important sectors: first, the announcement that an agreement on wages had been reached by the Ford Company and its workers; second, a similar announcement by the Chrysler Corporation; third, all the strikers in the meat industry announced that they would return to their jobs.

A group of Nebraska farmers planned to "strike against strikes" by refusing to ship products to market until industrial strikes ended.

CONTACTED MOON

As Chief Signal Officer, Maj. Gen. Harry C. Ingles, above, helped supervise the extraordinary feat of establishing radar contact with the moon, achieved by Army Signal Corps scientists from the Evans Signal Laboratory at Belmar, N. J.

238,857 Miles Distant

Using specially-designed equipment, pulses of extremely high frequency energy were shot into space at the speed of light—186,000 miles a second—and the echoes detected some 2 1/2 seconds later. The moon is about 238,857 miles distant, on the average, as both it and the earth move around the sun.

"The Guard Corps experiments have valuable peacetime as well as wartime applications, although it is impossible at this stage to predict with certainty what these will be," the War Department said.

One of the possibilities is the radio control of long-range jet or rocket-propelled missiles, circling the earth above the stratosphere. The German V-2 missiles were believed to have reached an altitude of 60 miles.

Peep Sight Used

Another "less likely" possibility, it added, is the radio control of "space ships" roaming thousands of miles beyond the earth's surface. Still another possible result of the discovery may be more accurate mapping of the moon's surface with its many visible irregularities. Radar equipment has already been used to measure much shorter distances with uncanny accuracy.

A staff of physicists and mathematicians passed many weeks computing the relative speeds of the earth and the moon before the special radar equipment for the experiment could be built. When the set was completed, the antenna was "aimed" at the moon optically by means of a peep-sight.

TINY DOG SAVES COLLIE'S LIFE

One day not long ago, Blackie, a big collie, disappeared from his home at a lumber camp near Cochrane. His master Guie, 12-year-old son of the camp cook, was away on a visit at the time. When he returned he struck out with a couple of men to find his dog.

Some woodsmen told of hearing a dog barking in the distance. Then one of the searchers came upon what he took to be other tracks. "They are Puce's tracks; she tracks like an otter!"

The snow was deep and Puce, the little dog—the name means flea—had found the going hard. At one-spot she had dug under 20 feet of logs and brush. In several other places she had chewed away shrubbery as if she had been carrying a load and got tangled up—previously a ham bone with enough meat to feed a couple of men had disappeared from the kitchen. Marks in the snow suggested Puce had stopped frequently to rest.

"After going a mile and a half we commenced to call, and Blackie answered," Guie exclaimed.

Blackie had got one of his front legs in the snare. Instead of tugging and fighting to get loose, as a wild animal would have done, Blackie sat down and waited.
