Warble Flies Cause Enormous Damage

Damage to Canadian cattle directly or indirectly attributable to warble flies continues to run into several millions of dollars a year. Injury caused by warble flies is of two kinds. The chief injury is the damage done to beef carcasses, due to the presence of warble cysts. The affected parts have to be trimmed from the carcass, and, because the cysts usually occur in the more expensive cuts in the back and loin, the damage done by the trimming and the consequent disfigurement is considerable. Also the injuries to hides result in large losses. A hide with a hole caused by the grub is useless for making the best leather articles, and hides showing five or more holes are automatically discounted in price.

Other serious causes of damage are the reduction of the milk yield in dairy cattle and loss of flesh in beef cattle, with a general deterioration in the health of the animals. On the approach of the warble flies, cattle become terror stricken and rush madly about the field in their efforts to evade the flies. This is a peculiar reaction, because the flies do not sting, but there can be no doubt about the harmful effect on the cattle.

Warble flies are of two kinds, known as the common cattle grub or heel fly, and the northern cattle grub or large warble fly. Their habits in general are the same. The heel fly appears in the season, March to June, while the large warble fly is active from early June to August. The heel fly lays its eggs in rows on the hairs of the legs and lower parts of the cattle; the large warble fly attaches its eggs in a similar way, each female laying from 400 to 800 eggs. The small grubs hatch in from 3 to 7 days, penetrate the skin, and migrate through the system of the animal. They remain there during the late summer until early winter when they again migrate, and finally come to rest under the skin of the back. Here the grubs form cysts and make breathing holes. When full grown they squeeze their way through the holes and drop to the ground. They change into black, hard, seed-like objects from which in 4 or 5 weeks the adult flies emerge. At once they mate and the female lays her eggs.

As has been shown in many parts of Canada, the complete control of warble flies in any area is possible only when all the cattle in a community are treated at the same time by a Derris or Rotenone wash applied to their backs in the early spring when the swellings on the backs of infested animals become conspicuous. The dates of application of the wash vary in different parts of Canada. Eastern Canada about the third week of March. The second and third applications should be made at intervals of 28 days, and, if practicable, a fourth after an interval of 35 days. More than one wash is necessary because all the grubs do not mature at the same time.

Provide A 'Creep' for Early Lambs

Lambs are arriving and the careful shepherd will undoubtedly be prepared. With plenty of legume fodder, a ration of concentrate made up to three parts oats and one part wheat bran, daily access to salt, bonemeal & fresh water, with daily exercise provided, there should be little to worry about at lambing time, states J. A. Telfer, in charge of Sheep Production, Dominion Department of Agriculture.

A ewe must be well fed and cared for in order to be in proper condition to nurse its young. A plentiful supply of milk for young lambs is the first requisite. Eighty to ninety pound lambs in one hundred days are most usually the product of excellent nursing ewes, which in turn have been under the care of an experienced and ever-watchful shepherd. Early lambs or lambs born in mid-winter should be provided with what is known as a creep—a slatted hurdle in the form of a picket fence with spars far enough apart to permit the lambs to pass through but close enough to prevent the sheep from doing so. The creep leads to a feeding pen for the lambs, in which has been erected a small trough holding a mixture of oats, wheat, bran and oil cake meal as also the choice bits of alfalfa or other well-cured clovers. With management of ewes and lambs as described, lambs will grow rapidly and be ready for market early in the season.
