VANDELEUR

The fact that the Liberal candidate in had an opportunity of becoming Preymier of the Province possibly added to the vote, as well as his personal popularity. His vote of 7,863, was a gain of 1,279 over the 6,584 votes in 1945, while his opponent, Mr. McCauley, dropped from 5,043 to 4,019.

The tables were turned in three of the municipalities that had given Howard McCauley, Progressive-Conservative candidate; a majority in the 1945 election. In Durham which is traditionally Conservative, Oliver walked off with 241 of a majority, compared with a majority of 35 there for McCauley in 1945; at Dundalk 85 more votes than in 1945, which gave him a majority of 26. Should "tails" only be considered, or should "tales" also be counted in deciding the score in Vandeleur grounding hunt, is now a debateable question. One day recently Howard Graham shot a groundhog that didn't have either. If the animal ever had a tail there was no evidence of it, not even a scar. Now the question is, was it born that way, did it meet with an accident, or was it an amputation case from a previous war? If so, is the enemy so hard pressed that they have to use this kind of throms, or are they Should "tails" only be considered, or Grey
