THE SYLVESTER DIAMOND

By BLANCHE ROBERTS

CHAPTER IV

When Dan Brewster had gone, Honey made sure that every window and door of the apartment was closed and locked and the shades pulled down. Then, to make doubly sure she was alone, she looked under the bed and in all the closets.

She opened her bag and drew out the velvet box. She sprang the catch and the light fell on the diamond in all its beauty.

"The Sylvester diamond," she explained simply.

"The Syl—" He caught his breath without finishing the word. He started to lift a hand, then let it fall back heavily at his side as though a weight pulled it down. The blood stilled drained from his face. He stared at Honey and his eyes were wide.

"You can't," she cried, alarmed by a sixth sense. "It's nearly 2 in the morning. You must be out of your mind. Joe, to think of such a thing. Whatever it is, it can wait until morning. There are such things as conventions, you know."

"I'm counting on, anyway," the tone he used made her blood run slow. He sounded cold, ruthless and determined.

"You can't," she insisted frantically. But he had already flicked the receiver in her ear.

She moved in a frenzied haste. There was no time to dress, or to do much thinking. She threw a fur coat over her pajamas and grabbed up the velvet box and her purse. The back door led into the hall and that avenue of flight was out. Only the fire escape remained, sinister, grimacing out the kitchen window. The doorbell rang and kept ringing. "He'll kill me," she kept repeating over and over, beside herself with terror.

On the sidewalk, she glanced quickly around, but saw no one. She darted around the corner and hailed a passing taxi. "I want a telephone book, please," she told the driver as he pulled away from the curb.

He reached inside a compartment for what she wanted. Scanning down the B's, she finally came to Daniel Brewster's name and opposite it the address. This she gave to the driver and sat huddled back in the car pulled up and stopped before the white stucco apartment house.

Modern Etiquette

By Roberts Lee

Q. In which hand should a servant hold a dish when presenting it to a guest at dinner?

A. In her left hand, unless the dish is too heavy, in which case it would be better to use both hands.

Q. When is the proper time for a girl to wear her engagement ring for the first time?

A. On the day when the engagement is formally announced.

Q. Is it all right, if the bridegroom is wealthy, for him to buy his bride's trousseau?

A. Never.

Q. How long should one stay when making a formal call?

A. The usual time for a formal call is twenty minutes, but if the hostess urges the caller to stay longer, ten or fifteen minutes may be added.

Q. Should one address his reply to the bride or to her parents when accepting a wedding invitation?

A. The acceptance should be addressed to the bride's parents, as the invitation was issued in their name.

Q. Is it permissible for a bride to have her mother acknowledge the wedding gifts?

A. No; personal notes should be written by the bride. They may be brief, but should be sincere and express genuine appreciation for the gift.

Q. Should a girl be in time to receive her escort when he calls, or would it be better to keep him waiting for a few minutes?

A. It would be silly to keep him waiting if she is dressed and ready. Most men admire promptness.

Q. Is it necessary that a person take some of every dish that is served by a hostess?

A. It is better to take from the majority of them. It would be very rude to refuse three or four dishes.

Q. Can you give me some suggestions as to what should be said when leaving someone to whom I have just been introduced?

A. "Goodbye, Mrs. Jones. I am very glad to have met you," or, "Goodbye, Mrs. Jones, I hope that I shall see you again soon."

Q. The boy of the moment whom she wants to date feels the same way. One writes me, "I like a girl and she likes me. But her parents refuse to let her go with boys. I asked her mother to let her accompany me to church, but she refused."

Q. The girl is 16, and a senior in high school. I think she should be allowed to date sometimes, don't you?

TABLE TALKS

A little late to talk about pickles, perhaps, but here's one that can be made almost any time. It is a real help when you're out of stock of "regular" pickles for getting low.

The British have always been great pickle-eaters, and are even more so now when something pungent is almost indispensable in avoiding the monotony of rationed meats. Many of their favorites have an Indian or Chinese "back-ground" but pickle-cabbage is British through and through.

Spiced Vinegar
This is a good all-round condiment and a grand addition to many salads. If tightly corked it keeps well.

Red Pickled Cabbage
A firm, crisp, tight red cabbage. Salt.

Spiced Vinegar
Remove the coarse outer cabbage leaves. Cut in quarters and take away any tough parts of the stalk.

.... FALL FAIR TIME IN ONTARIO

Fair Time Highlights
By the Ful-O-Pep Reporter

All through the fall fair season there has been one topic of conversation and argument which this reporter has heard over and over again. It is this, "Are the large fairs squeezing out the good old rural shows?" Some say that the small fairs can not compete with the larger shows, and should just give up the fight. Others say that the small rural show has a real place in the community with proper guidance could thrive and prosper.

Just because the city fairs draw a lot of the people from the rural areas some think that the small fair should therefore imitate the C.N.E. and put on a big show with professional entertainment and plenty of ballroom to attract their crowds. Others claim that when the small fair attempts to do this it has lost its reason for existence and will surely fail.

One of the fairs we attended this year was full of typical rural activities and sports. There was a great pig chase, where the contestants got crowded together with mud and could not catch the porker for about ten minutes. There was a greased pole climb where several everyone roared with laughter. There was a horseback making contest, which most of the city folk had never seen before. There was a small pool with a log-rolling competition going on, and after several ducks were tethered in the pool and prizes were given to anyone who could throw a log over their head. There was not a professional entertainer on the grounds and the city people who saw it all swore they would not have missed it for the world.

Showing Their Prize Winning—Ful-O-Pep fed Angus steers at the Erin Fair are the two McKinnon brothers, Doug and Ken, who won first and third prizes respectively. Ken won the King's Guinness at the Royal Winter Fair last year, and sold his steer for $10.00.

Kilties Lead Grand Parade

Auctioneer Ray Hindley—in a jovial mood, as everyone was at the Erin Fair, lent his considerable talents to the job of auctioning off the surplus pies and cakes that were left in the United Church Ladies' Aid refreshment stand. On other days Mr. Hindley is a farm sales auctioneer.

Horses Standing

At noon today when I passed, I saw you standing there and I found it hard to believe that man Who called you friend could treat you so—

How can he, who claims to be Your master, lack in pity? How can he sit, while the insect feast Upon your burning flanks, pocket beat, array his many claws which have a strong flavor that may overpower the others?

A hot or mild vinegar is sufficient for most tastes. To each quart of vinegar allow and ounce of space-plate such saucepan, cover closely, and bring slowly to a boil. Remove from the heat and with the lid still on the pan leave for at least 2 hours to cool and steep. Strain and use as required. An ounce of salt may be added to the spice if desired.

IN THE VIOLENT "battle of the generations," no other cause is so bitterly fought as the question of dating.

Parents do not withhold privileges without reason. Nothing would please them more than to let their daughters have what they want—and it is so much easier to say yes! But they have watched other 15 and 16-year-olds dashing around with boys, and seen that nothing

"I'll raise you with a package of super-delicious Post's Grape-Nuts Flakes"

"OK, pal. That's a blue chip if I ever saw one—peaking deliciously, of course."

"And these mally-rich, honey-golden Post's Grape-Nuts Flakes are a whole stack of good nourishment."

"A spade-full of carbohydrates for energy."

"And minerals—for muscle and growth and rich blood."

"Using two grains instead of one in making Post's Grape-Nuts Flakes is what really pays off in double breakfast enjoyment and rosy-cheek nourishment."

"Fellas—I think I'll pop over to the grocery right now and buy up enough Post's Grape-Nuts Flakes for a full house."

Down At The End of the old, heavily beamed cattle shed at the Erin Fair were John Schram, 14, and Jack Yeman, 11.
