

Finest Quality Tea

"SALIA" ORANGE PEKOE

THE SYLVESTER DIAMOND

By BLANCHE ROBERTS

The story this time is about a woman's hand and that evening she was sitting at the table with her coffee and a book. She was looking at the diamond and wondering whether it is a man or woman's.

CHAPTER XI
(Continued from last week)
"Out of circulation," she answered truthfully, and was glad she did not have to tell a lie to a man who was about to die. "It will never tempt anyone else again."

"In the ocean?" His voice was an angry croak and Honey realized that had he been able to reach her, he probably would have choked the life from her body. Even knowing that he could not move to harm her, she still had a wild desire to push back from him.

"That's as good an answer as any," she told him.
He gave a rasping laugh that was ugly to hear and she covered her face for a second to hide it. Then she spoke again.

"Too bad your friend Brewster couldn't know that you stole the stone from Mrs. Sylvester. I am sorry now I didn't tell him that night before I hit him over the head."

"Oh! Honey sucked in her breath painfully as she understood what had happened to Dan in the apartment. Then she said: "He knows. I told him. I went to give him the diamond. There was pleasure in being able to admit that knowledge to Joe even in his critical condition."

There was a gasp from him, both of surprise and pain. He waited to draw a deep breath and she heard him struggle hard to get it. His closed eyes as bitter tears spilled over her lashes. Joe had a few good points that she recognized as she sat there watching him—sending her beautiful flowers, spending his money freely, taking no all the nice places in town, giving her nothing in return, except a few smiles, her company, and being engaged to him after a fashion.

"Are you in great pain, Joe?" she asked gently. "I am sorry," he said. "Pain, is—"

"How did you find out I took the diamond, Joe?"
"By the only clue the police had. 'What was it?' Her heart stood still with fright. If Joe had guessed, she had thought to do the same thing. For a long time he did not say anything and Honey was beginning to wonder if he were dead, when he spoke again with new strength in his voice.

Modern Etiquette

By Roberts Lee

Q. When a hostess is being introduced to a man, should she rise?
A. Yes, always. The hostess should rise and also offer her hand, whether it is a man or woman.

Q. Should a note or letter of congratulation be sent upon receiving an announcement of a birth?
A. Yes, and promptly. Sometimes a little gift for the baby can take the place of this note.

Q. When setting a dinner table, where should the water glass and the wine glass be placed?
A. Place the water glass at the top of the plate, towards the right of the knives, the wine glass to the right and beyond the water glass.

Q. When a woman has been a widow for several years and is going to marry again, what color gown should she wear?
A. Almost any color but white. Usually a delicate pastel shade, not too light, is in good taste.

Q. How should a man assist a woman in ascending a staircase or bus?
A. By a light touch on her elbow.

Q. When a person is being introduced to another, is a courteous acknowledgment necessary, even if the introduction is for any reason not agreeable?
A. Yes, the well-bred person will extend a courteous acknowledgment under any circumstances.

HOW?
"Did you tackle that trouble that came your way?"
"With a resolute heart and cheerful!"
"Or hide your face from the light of day?"

"It doesn't matter now who you love," he spoke just above a whisper and Honey had to lean forward to catch his words. "You won't love to marry anyone." His words sounded final, as though he knew it for certain.

Honey was out of his line of focus, but she shook her head and in her mind she was saying: "I'm not even hurt. The cry 'I'm not' me up a bit and knocked me out for a few minutes. But I am all right now."

"She could see Art's tall figure peering to and fro on the highway, impatiently waiting for a motorist to come to their aid. He looked up as if he had not heard her word of denial about her death.

"There were two things in the world I wanted above all else because I love beauty. The Sylvester diamond and you. You saw that to. But I can take you with me." A gasping sound escaped his throat. It was a sound of surprise and delight. He moved his body slightly. His head turned to face her and she was struck by the darkness that hid what might lie in his eyes at the moment.

"As they faced each other there in the darkness, a silence seemed to settle over the earth and not a sound came through the night. It was so still that Honey could hear her own heart thumping. When she thought of the couple and the quiet no longer Joe spoke.

"You are very beautiful, Honey. But you are going to die." "No, Joe. I'm all right," insisted Honey.
"Patience going to die," he repeated and his voice was stronger now. And then suddenly he lifted an arm and a gun waved toward her. "Close range. She tried to move, but a spark of fire as Joe pulled the trigger.

Honey slumped over in a heap on the ground as Art came running up.
(Continued next week)

CROSSWORD PUZZLE

Grid for crossword puzzle with clues and answers.

No Hustle And Bustle Of Politics Here—It's the Storytime Hour, and just like thousands of other youngsters in all parts of Canada, do Sandra and Edward Drew—children of George Drew M.P., national leader of the Progressive Conservative Party—listen intently as their mother tell them a pre-bedtime tale.

How Can I?

By Anne Astley

Q. How can I relieve an irritating cough?
A. Prepare a mixture of the juice of two lemons, one teaspoonful of water, and one tablespoon of granulated sugar. Take a teaspoonful every half hour.

Q. How can I take the frost out of fruits and vegetables?
A. Put them in cold water and allow them to remain until their proper appearance indicates that the frost has disappeared.

Q. How can I prevent clothespins from freezing to the clothes when hanging on a cold day?
A. Warm the clothespins in the oven before hanging out the wash. They will not freeze.

Q. How can I remove dog hair and lint from wooden clothing?
A. Wet a rubber sponge, squeeze almost dry, and rub over the clothing.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

By Rev. R. Barclay Warren

The Standards Of The Kingdom Golden Text: Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness.—Matt. 6:33.

Most people will agree that no three successive chapters in all the Bible are as significant and important as Matthew 5-7. Here is the Sermon on the Mount, the law, but it is fulfilled. He did not come to fulfill the law as it had been misinterpreted and applied by the Pharisees. They had sought to keep the letter of the law and still violate its true meaning. Here Jesus restores the law to its proper meaning, and gives examples to illustrate what He means. Love is the perfect fulfillment of the perfect law.

The beatitudes with which the Sermon on the Mount begins are happy. The Greek word translated "blessed" is in some versions translated "happy." From the time an individual begins to turn away from sin to God, he receives the joy of happiness. This happiness increases and is characteristic of the Christian's life, sustaining him even when he is persecuted and falsely accused.

The sermon closes with a parable. The person who hears and does the sayings of Jesus is compared to a man who built his house upon a rock. The house withstands the storm. But the one who hears and fails to do the sayings of Jesus is like the man who built on sand. The house collapses in the storm. Knowing the teaching of Jesus is not sufficient. We must obey.

SEE SHARKEY THE SEAL And 13 Other Great Acts In The Terrific Stage And Tank Show In The Arena Twice Daily - 2:15-8:15

"Where on earth is Junior?"

TEST YOUR I. Q.

WHO WAS ANN?

The name Ann, or one of its many variations, provides a common bond for all these famous women. Try and identify them from the descriptions given, then check your results with the answers, printed below, underneath.

- 1. A woman who was the first to wear a hat.
2. A movie for which advertisements proclaimed "Garbo Talks."
3. "She's my Annie, I'm her Joe."
4. Henry VIII's second wife, beheaded for adultery.
5. The aristocratic heroine of a novel by Count Tolstoy.
6. A star in Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show.
7. Fatima constantly asked her, "Do you see anyone coming?"
8. An orphan adopted by Oliver Warbucks.
9. "In a white petticoat and a red nose, the longer she stands, the shorter she grows."
10. An Englishwoman for whom a style of furniture is named.
11. "For Bonnie — I'd lay me down and die."
12. The ship, in W. S. Gilbert's "Pirates of Penzance," which had a single and cannibalistic survivor.
13. An actress supposed to have bathed daily in milk.
14. The wife of the Baron of Avon.
15. The greatest ballet dancer of modern times.

ANNE HIRST Your Family Counselor

By Anne Astley

"DEAR ANNE HIRST. My daughter, 23, is separated from her husband, and is living with you. She has a sweet little girl of four. I don't know how much longer I can stand her conduct!"

"She has never had the responsibility of taking care of her child. All she cares about is having fun. She drinks, and stays out till three or four in the morning, sometimes does not come home at all. She has even taken the baby with her!"

"Her husband knows nothing of this. He wants to go back with her, but she won't consider it. She wants to run around with other men."

"I've been a good mother, tried to make it as easy as possible for her. She works during the day, and I keep the child, do her laundry, and accept very little money for everything."

"I've talked to her many times, told her how wrong she is, in a nice way. I've even tried to force her to believe, but to no avail. My husband (her stepfather) doesn't approve, and there's a constant quarrel at our house all the time. Between the two they are killing me by degrees. I cannot sleep until she gets home, and I cannot take much longer."

"I tell her husband! He is a nice man, but he is in a nice way. I don't want to hurt my daughter, but I must do what I can. I love her with all my heart. All I want is for her to live a good life, and be a good mother."

Sometimes a loving mother can make things too easy for her children. For their own sakes, they need to hold up their end and perform the duties which life has laid upon them. If you need courage in dealing with them, write to Anne Hirst, at Box 1, 123 Eighteenth St., New Toronto, Ont.

SEE AMERICA'S finest springtime exhibition. Four huge floors with hundreds of exhibits plus 100+ great features, including Canada's largest boat show.

Canadian National Sportsmen's Show, The Coliseum, Toronto, Canada. Fri., March 18 to Sat., March 26. Prices: Evenings and Saturday Matinees: All seats reserved; Box Seats $1.50; Reserved Seats $1.00. Week Day Matinees: Box Seats $1.00; Other seats "Rush" $0.25. All prices—PLUS admission to buildings—Adults 50c; Children 25c.

FALSE SECURITY

President Truman says he is going to increase social security.

By this means that a somewhat larger amount will be withheld from a worker's pay check each week and that the employer will be asked to match the amount. The New Yorker, Mark Sullivan, in the Tribune, points out that with the value of money dropping the way it is, an increase in social security is only an apparent increase, not a real increase. Mr. Sullivan argues that the fifty cents that was withheld from your pay check in 1937, would have bought you a square meal at that time, but that when you are sixty-five years old and get the fifty cents back, it may buy you only a small box of dried raisins. He says the way to increase social security is to see that the dollar doesn't shrink. The argument is sound enough. Perhaps the way to manage social security is to forget about dollars and withhold meat instead. Every employer could be required to maintain a deep freeze unit and withhold one square meal each week for each employee. Then when an employee reaches sixty-five and starts digging around like a squirrel on winter morning, he will dig up some frozen meat instead of a shrivelled dollar. . . .

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

By Gwendoline P. Clarke

Actually I am right here at Ginger Farm but in memory of my childhood I am writing this in the city of Moose Jaw. I was staying there during the winter of 1937-38. My father had brought me there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

FALSE SECURITY

President Truman says he is going to increase social security.

By this means that a somewhat larger amount will be withheld from a worker's pay check each week and that the employer will be asked to match the amount. The New Yorker, Mark Sullivan, in the Tribune, points out that with the value of money dropping the way it is, an increase in social security is only an apparent increase, not a real increase. Mr. Sullivan argues that the fifty cents that was withheld from your pay check in 1937, would have bought you a square meal at that time, but that when you are sixty-five years old and get the fifty cents back, it may buy you only a small box of dried raisins. He says the way to increase social security is to see that the dollar doesn't shrink. The argument is sound enough. Perhaps the way to manage social security is to forget about dollars and withhold meat instead. Every employer could be required to maintain a deep freeze unit and withhold one square meal each week for each employee. Then when an employee reaches sixty-five and starts digging around like a squirrel on winter morning, he will dig up some frozen meat instead of a shrivelled dollar. . . .

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

By Gwendoline P. Clarke

Actually I am right here at Ginger Farm but in memory of my childhood I am writing this in the city of Moose Jaw. I was staying there during the winter of 1937-38. My father had brought me there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

FALSE SECURITY

President Truman says he is going to increase social security.

By this means that a somewhat larger amount will be withheld from a worker's pay check each week and that the employer will be asked to match the amount. The New Yorker, Mark Sullivan, in the Tribune, points out that with the value of money dropping the way it is, an increase in social security is only an apparent increase, not a real increase. Mr. Sullivan argues that the fifty cents that was withheld from your pay check in 1937, would have bought you a square meal at that time, but that when you are sixty-five years old and get the fifty cents back, it may buy you only a small box of dried raisins. He says the way to increase social security is to see that the dollar doesn't shrink. The argument is sound enough. Perhaps the way to manage social security is to forget about dollars and withhold meat instead. Every employer could be required to maintain a deep freeze unit and withhold one square meal each week for each employee. Then when an employee reaches sixty-five and starts digging around like a squirrel on winter morning, he will dig up some frozen meat instead of a shrivelled dollar. . . .

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

By Gwendoline P. Clarke

Actually I am right here at Ginger Farm but in memory of my childhood I am writing this in the city of Moose Jaw. I was staying there during the winter of 1937-38. My father had brought me there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

FALSE SECURITY

President Truman says he is going to increase social security.

By this means that a somewhat larger amount will be withheld from a worker's pay check each week and that the employer will be asked to match the amount. The New Yorker, Mark Sullivan, in the Tribune, points out that with the value of money dropping the way it is, an increase in social security is only an apparent increase, not a real increase. Mr. Sullivan argues that the fifty cents that was withheld from your pay check in 1937, would have bought you a square meal at that time, but that when you are sixty-five years old and get the fifty cents back, it may buy you only a small box of dried raisins. He says the way to increase social security is to see that the dollar doesn't shrink. The argument is sound enough. Perhaps the way to manage social security is to forget about dollars and withhold meat instead. Every employer could be required to maintain a deep freeze unit and withhold one square meal each week for each employee. Then when an employee reaches sixty-five and starts digging around like a squirrel on winter morning, he will dig up some frozen meat instead of a shrivelled dollar. . . .

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

By Gwendoline P. Clarke

Actually I am right here at Ginger Farm but in memory of my childhood I am writing this in the city of Moose Jaw. I was staying there during the winter of 1937-38. My father had brought me there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

FALSE SECURITY

President Truman says he is going to increase social security.

By this means that a somewhat larger amount will be withheld from a worker's pay check each week and that the employer will be asked to match the amount. The New Yorker, Mark Sullivan, in the Tribune, points out that with the value of money dropping the way it is, an increase in social security is only an apparent increase, not a real increase. Mr. Sullivan argues that the fifty cents that was withheld from your pay check in 1937, would have bought you a square meal at that time, but that when you are sixty-five years old and get the fifty cents back, it may buy you only a small box of dried raisins. He says the way to increase social security is to see that the dollar doesn't shrink. The argument is sound enough. Perhaps the way to manage social security is to forget about dollars and withhold meat instead. Every employer could be required to maintain a deep freeze unit and withhold one square meal each week for each employee. Then when an employee reaches sixty-five and starts digging around like a squirrel on winter morning, he will dig up some frozen meat instead of a shrivelled dollar. . . .

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

By Gwendoline P. Clarke

Actually I am right here at Ginger Farm but in memory of my childhood I am writing this in the city of Moose Jaw. I was staying there during the winter of 1937-38. My father had brought me there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

FALSE SECURITY

President Truman says he is going to increase social security.

By this means that a somewhat larger amount will be withheld from a worker's pay check each week and that the employer will be asked to match the amount. The New Yorker, Mark Sullivan, in the Tribune, points out that with the value of money dropping the way it is, an increase in social security is only an apparent increase, not a real increase. Mr. Sullivan argues that the fifty cents that was withheld from your pay check in 1937, would have bought you a square meal at that time, but that when you are sixty-five years old and get the fifty cents back, it may buy you only a small box of dried raisins. He says the way to increase social security is to see that the dollar doesn't shrink. The argument is sound enough. Perhaps the way to manage social security is to forget about dollars and withhold meat instead. Every employer could be required to maintain a deep freeze unit and withhold one square meal each week for each employee. Then when an employee reaches sixty-five and starts digging around like a squirrel on winter morning, he will dig up some frozen meat instead of a shrivelled dollar. . . .

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

By Gwendoline P. Clarke

Actually I am right here at Ginger Farm but in memory of my childhood I am writing this in the city of Moose Jaw. I was staying there during the winter of 1937-38. My father had brought me there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

FALSE SECURITY

President Truman says he is going to increase social security.

By this means that a somewhat larger amount will be withheld from a worker's pay check each week and that the employer will be asked to match the amount. The New Yorker, Mark Sullivan, in the Tribune, points out that with the value of money dropping the way it is, an increase in social security is only an apparent increase, not a real increase. Mr. Sullivan argues that the fifty cents that was withheld from your pay check in 1937, would have bought you a square meal at that time, but that when you are sixty-five years old and get the fifty cents back, it may buy you only a small box of dried raisins. He says the way to increase social security is to see that the dollar doesn't shrink. The argument is sound enough. Perhaps the way to manage social security is to forget about dollars and withhold meat instead. Every employer could be required to maintain a deep freeze unit and withhold one square meal each week for each employee. Then when an employee reaches sixty-five and starts digging around like a squirrel on winter morning, he will dig up some frozen meat instead of a shrivelled dollar. . . .

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

By Gwendoline P. Clarke

Actually I am right here at Ginger Farm but in memory of my childhood I am writing this in the city of Moose Jaw. I was staying there during the winter of 1937-38. My father had brought me there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.

I can see the boarding house with its piano crosswise in the living room; big square window with a lovely view of the city and the department of public health, which was there; stayed a couple of days and then had to return to our temporary home five miles west of the city.