

THE RHYMING OPTIMIST

By Aline Michaelis

MY TASK

A task have I: To bring always My share of gladness to the days,
That other lives, perhaps less bright,
May gleam some glimpses of delight
To cheer their shadowed ways.

A task have I: to find content Though sun sometimes with shade is blent,
To seek some wiser hand than chance
In every quirk of circumstance
And solve the message sent.

A task have I: to pass along
The cadences of carefree song
And send their echo far afield Till right and beauty stand revealed
Where all had seemed but wrong.

For all that comes to me of good
I greet with truest gratitude; Good gifts are given only in trust,
And I who would be always just Share them in humble mood.

Most God-like Dower

This, then, is more than all the rest men prize,
Than any claims of Earth's most ancient race,
Than any group the potentates devise,
Or any wonders of a well-loved face.

For every race has had unworthy
heirs,
The proudest dynasties have fallen to dust,
And Beauty's boast will all become despairs
When ruthless Time has blurred them as he must.

This, then, is more — the power that defies Old Time and all the whims of chance and change,
The force that far beneath life's surface lies,
But dimly glimpsed as something vast and strange.

Most God-like dower, this, of all Earth's dream,
The will that rules, invincible, supreme!

Circles of Faith

Take from the world its crosses, their sorrows;
Seek, openly, elysian enchantments,
And, every morn shall bring glad Tomorrows, Spreading God's sunshine o'er earth's escarpments.

Enchantments are as practical as streets,
Within a town, if men will have it so,
As there is joy in sharing what entreats,
To standards meet, to a fair entrepot.

There is a faith which builds on others' loss,
As though Life's highest good were to impose
On fellow-men, restraints from what is dress
For them, and, on the faithful health bestows.

There is a destiny where man is found,
A plaintive suppliant for grace, and sign,
That, somehow, he shall make his life redound To mankind's good, wherein "Thy weal is mine."

To make thyself a hostage to the race,
Needing palladium as friend and guide,
Gives to thy life a truly happy place,
Among thy fellows, whereso'er abide.

To make each day a conscious jubilee,
In which unconscious ends are realized
Through contacts oft unknown, builds sacrifice
Of life, in which no one is sacrificed.

Who Will Be Victorious in the Forthcoming British Elections?

The political forces of Great Britain are mustering all followers under their banners to prepare for the great onslaught which will take place on May 20th, when a record poll is expected. If the recent by-elections in the Old Country are any criterion, the outlook would appear bad for Premier Stanley Baldwin and his Conservative Government. Mr. Ramsay Macdonald, (left) leader of the Labor Party, is very confident of victory in view of the fact that ninety per cent. of his clashes with the Government and Liberal parties in the by-elections have resulted in his favor, while Mr. Lloyd George, war-time Premier and Leader of the Liberal Party, expects to turn the scale with his new unemployment platform. Premier Baldwin (inset) says nothing but continues smilingly on his way. He knows that his Government was responsible for the franchise recently given to the female voters in the Old Country and that means 5,000,000 more voters this coming May. It remains to be seen whether the new voters are fickle.
