Rich Color Needs No Ornamentation

A rich, luxurious color needs no ornamentation. Such, at least, is the idea artistically expressed in the evening ensemble sketched here, both in severity of line and absence of trimming. The pure white satin evening gown forms a priceless setting for the ruby red velvet, collarless wrap. It is cut straight and simply, draping gracefully while falling in a slight flare on one side.

The jewelry for the costume carries out the atelier's theme—elegant simplicity. A single pendant of diamonds and rubies hangs on three strands of platinum chain. There are earrings to match. Incidentally the new costume jewelry being shown now uses synthetic stones so adroitly that one may, at very little expense, complete a color scheme with just such an exquisite trinket.

Featuring Curves

Even tweed is endorsing the welcome news that curves are once again being looked upon with favor. This tailored coat dress of black and red mixed tweed makes a decided feature of curved seams. At the same time the effect is emphasized by the circular skirt with wide circular panels. If you would believe it, these smart panels develop a new trick in pockets.

And no really chic tailleur salies forth these days without a bit of pique. This one-piece frock boasts proudly of a standing collar and cuffs of that favorite cotton fabric—white pique. The side closing of the skirt and the wrists are trimmed with bright red buttons, while this color is further accented by a red buckle on the wide belt.

Health Service of the Canadian Medical Association

Maternal Mortality

Some weeks ago an article was published, under the above heading which concluded by urging that the provision of adequate medical and nursing care for every mother both before and during her confinement be accepted as a national policy, and that every community in Canada bestir itself to see that such services were made available for each mother in the community. Since the publication of this article, requests have come for information as to what might be done, and an opportunity presents itself to reply, in a second article, to the questions suggested by the previous one.

In a country so widespread and so varying in population and in climate, it is impossible to lay down a plan which would be suitable for all. The best that can be done is to state what should be provided and then urge the communities, who know their own conditions, their particular needs and their resources to work out a plan suitable to their locality.

Every expectant mother should have ante-natal care, which means an early examination and supervision during her entire pregnancy by her physician. At the time of her confinement, she should have her doctor and also the services of a graduate nurse. The properly qualified nurse does not take the place of the doctor, but, working under the doctor's direction, she is as indispensable as is the doctor himself. There is also need for hospital accommodation for those cases which cannot be properly cared for at home.

When a community is ready to face this problem, or when some interested persons are willing to make an effort to do something, it is advisable for them to consult with the county or district medical society and with the Health Officer. The lay group and the professional group should work together in making a study as to particular needs and regarding plans for the future. Representatives from the local nursing profession should, of course, be included in such a conference.

The apparent impossibility of doing everything that should be done is no reason for deterring a willing group from doing their utmost at present. Progress is made by small steps just as surely as by occasional leaps and bounds.
