A RUSTY NAIL

There exists an impression that some particular danger lies in a scratch from a rusty nail. There is danger in any scratch because when the skin is broken, there is always the chance of germs entering and causing an infection. The rusty nail is not much more likely to do harm than a clean nail, excepting that the rusty nail had probably been lying around and so has had a better chance of becoming contaminated. The rust itself will do no harm; it is simply some of the iron of the nail which has become oxidized.

The fear of the rusty nail likely had its origin through persons noticing that wounds made by rusty articles which had been lying around on the ground caused serious infections, and that tetanus or lockjaw sometimes occurred after such wounds.

If nails lie around on the ground, they are almost certain to rust, and if the earth is contaminated with the secretions of animals, there is every likelihood that the germ which causes tetanus will be there, and it is also quite possible that some of the soil containing these germs will become attached to the rusty nail.

A wound from such a nail is therefore dangerous, not because the nail is rusty, but because it has attached to it some dirt or manure which contains germs capable of causing infection, and because among these germs will perhaps be found that of tetanus.

Unfortunately for us, the germ of tetanus has the power to form spores. The spore is a sort of resting stage during which the germ is able to resist the conditions which destroy most germs. Because of its ability to form spores, the tetanus germ is able to exist in a soil for long periods of time.

A wound in any part of the body should be promptly and properly treated. The most important point is to cleanse the wound thoroughly with soap and water, and then to cover it with a sterile dressing in order to keep dirt out.

A particularly dangerous type of wound is the punctured wound. In such a wound, the penetration is deep, germs may be carried in quite a long way, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to clean out the wound by ordinary washing, as it extends so far below the surface. Wounds of this type should always be brought under medical treatment.

When PAIN Comes

WHAT many people call indigestion very often means excess acid in the stomach. The stomach nerves have been over-stimulated, and food sours. The corrective is an alkali, which neutralizes the acids instantly. And the best alkali known to medical science is Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this harmless, tasteless alkali in water neutralizes instantly many times that much acid, and the symptoms disappear at once. You will never use crude methods when once you learn the efficiency of this. Go get a small bottle to try.

Be sure to get the genuine Phillips Milk of Magnesia prescribed by physicians for 50 years in correcting excess acids. 25c and 50c a bottle—any drugstore.
