

Three Features Characterized Throne Speech

Ottawa, March 31st —(Special to The Haileyburian). Apart from the opening stage, when Mr. King delivered his general attack on the Government and Mr. Bennett made his reply, the debate on the reply to the Speech from the Throne was characterized by three features.

Liberal contributions were confined to destructive criticism.

Independent addresses of Progressives, Labor, etc., while critical, were inclined to sympathize with the Government and to concede that reasonable time has not been given Mr. Bennett to grapple with conditions.

Speeches of Government supporters struck a new level in the freedom with which views were expressed and courses of action suggested to the Ministry. Ordinarily Government supporters become apologists. If they have remedies to offer they offer them in caucus where the Government may accept or reject them without public light. At the very first Government caucus of this session Mr. Bennett asked his members to exercise complete freedom as to whether they would speak, and if so, upon what lines.

It was evidently his belief that free discussion might shed new light on problems and perhaps outline some useful courses of procedure. He may not be disappointed. Useful suggestions have been made, though some of them must of necessity be made operable through provincial rather than Dominion authority.

Western Conservative members led in probing credit conditions which are certainly one factor in western depression. It is realized, of course, that financial organizations must protect the security of the funds they hold in trust. Otherwise they would soon be without funds to administer. There is a vast gulf between security, however, and the imposition of unfair interest rates or the refusal of loans upon sound security where intending borrowers will not submit, through discounts, or otherwise, to exorbitant rates.

Considerable information bearing on the subject has been unearthed in the west during the last year and there is a direct finding of a sub-committee of the Alberta Legislature to the effect that excessive rates are charged and that farmer borrowers are not given the consideration adequate to "the proper financing of their ordinary operations."

Trust companies, mortgage companies, insurance companies and finance corporations are involved as deeply as the banks in the criticism which is heard. In most instances interest rates are a matter for provincial control but there is hope expressed that ventilation of conditions will lead to voluntary remedial action by the interests criticised. Failing that there will doubtless be pressure for legislative action to force it.

study grain marketing conditions in Canada. Sir Josiah is recognized as one of the greatest economists of his day and his efforts are to be directed to methods which will secure to the producer a greater percentage of the final selling price of his products.

Incidentally, his studies, if successful, will be a factor in opening new or larger markets to Canadian goods.

A related movement which is gaining force is a demand for the narrowing of the differential between export and domestic transportation charges. Both Progressive and Conservative private members urged action in this connection and it is not improbable that it will be one of the first big problems to engage the attention of the reconstructed Railway Commission.

When the House re-assembles after Easter it will be ready to tackle the budget and other far-reaching legislation that is scheduled for consideration.
