John R. McCracken Wins Final in Bowling Schedule

John R. McCracken won the final in the bowling schedule in a game with Judge Hartman on Monday afternoon. There was quite a gallery present and keen interest in the game, which was close all the way.

Games since the last report resulted as follows: In the first section Roger won from McCracken by default, and from Joy in an extra end, then McCracken and Roger played off for the group, the former taking the game. In the second section Isherwood won from Reckin and Hartman from Isherwood giving the judge the honors in the group. A new schedule is being drawn up and games will commence tonight. There will be nine rinks entered.

The Game of Golf

London Times

The Scots have conferred many benefits upon the race. Modesty forbids more than casual mention of Glenlivet and haggis. The bagpipes and kilts have some claim to our regard. On somewhat higher levels philosophy and poetry stand as valuable assets from over the border. A sound theology can be reconciled with Clydeside radicalism, stag stalking, salmon fishing, and a merry fling whenever the clans gather for the sword dance. That aside, the Scots have invented curling for the Winter season and gofff, or golf, for the Summer days, for which the whole of the civilized world owes them a debt of deepest gratitude.

Where the game originated is

A start has been made from the Quebec end on the proposed high way to connect the towns of Rouyn and Noranda with Kirkland Lake, and it is expected this road will be completed for traffic next year, each province doing the stretch within its own boundaries.

Mary Vandervleit, New Liskeard's speedy girl runner, won the 100 and 200 metres races at the big meet in Toronto on Saturday. The whole district extends congratulations.

Shy Little Girl and The King

somewhat of a puzzle. But there is reason to believe it was imported from Holland, for, in the year 1618, James VI. of Scotland enacted a protective tariff in behalf of the game.

But long before this date, golf was played in Scotland and had taken such a hold upon the popular fancy that the Edinburgh authorities took alarm lest the sport should put the ancient "waping-shawingis," or practice of archery, on the retired list. Therefore it was ordered by His Majesty James IV that "golf be utterly cryit down and nocht usit." This happened in 1471. Likely the mandate would have had better effect if His Majesty had himself obeyed the royal rescript. But seeing he was content to hand over the mandate to the lords, spiritual and temporal, hoping they might do the right thing and himself stealing off for a round on the course, it can hardly be surprising if the prohibition took no effect. A century afterwards another attempt was made to put down the golf game, but it wound up with a discreet compromise, namely, that golf should not be played during the time of sermons in church.

That cautionary reservation has gone the way of others. But the royal and ancient game of golf is rightly named. The Scottish monarchs of the Stuart dynasty played it. Mary Queen of Scots tried her skill. Charles I was an adept with the niblick. The "Merry Monarch" was probably too lazy for such exertion; he had other appointments. Yet James II was a devotee. When Duke of York, he chose "Johnnie Paterson" for partner in a four-some. And they won. And the Duke gave Johnnie half the stakes. And Johnnie builded himself a house in Canongate out of the proceeds. For him it was a "field day." It was not until the middle of the Victorian period that golf caught on in England with the same enthusiasm as cricket, tennis and other sports. Then clubs were organized and links laid out in all parts of the country. The late A. J. Balfour was a great player. He kept up the tradition and, did credit to the game.

Today, thousands of votaries are never happier than when whacking their way across the turf. And it is good medicine for young and old. There's a way out of the reparations bog. Why not Mr. MacDonald and Chancellor Bruening play Secretary Mellon and Aristide Briand, with war debts cancellation to the winners?"
