PRINCES CHARGED WITH THEFT

No strangers to the national spotlight, by reason of their marriages to prominent women, the Georgian brothers, Prince David left, and Prince Serge Mdivani, right, are again centres of interest by reason of their indictment at Los Angeles on 14 counts of grand theft. The charges arose through an investigation of an oil company promoted by them.

ANOTHER TRAGEDY

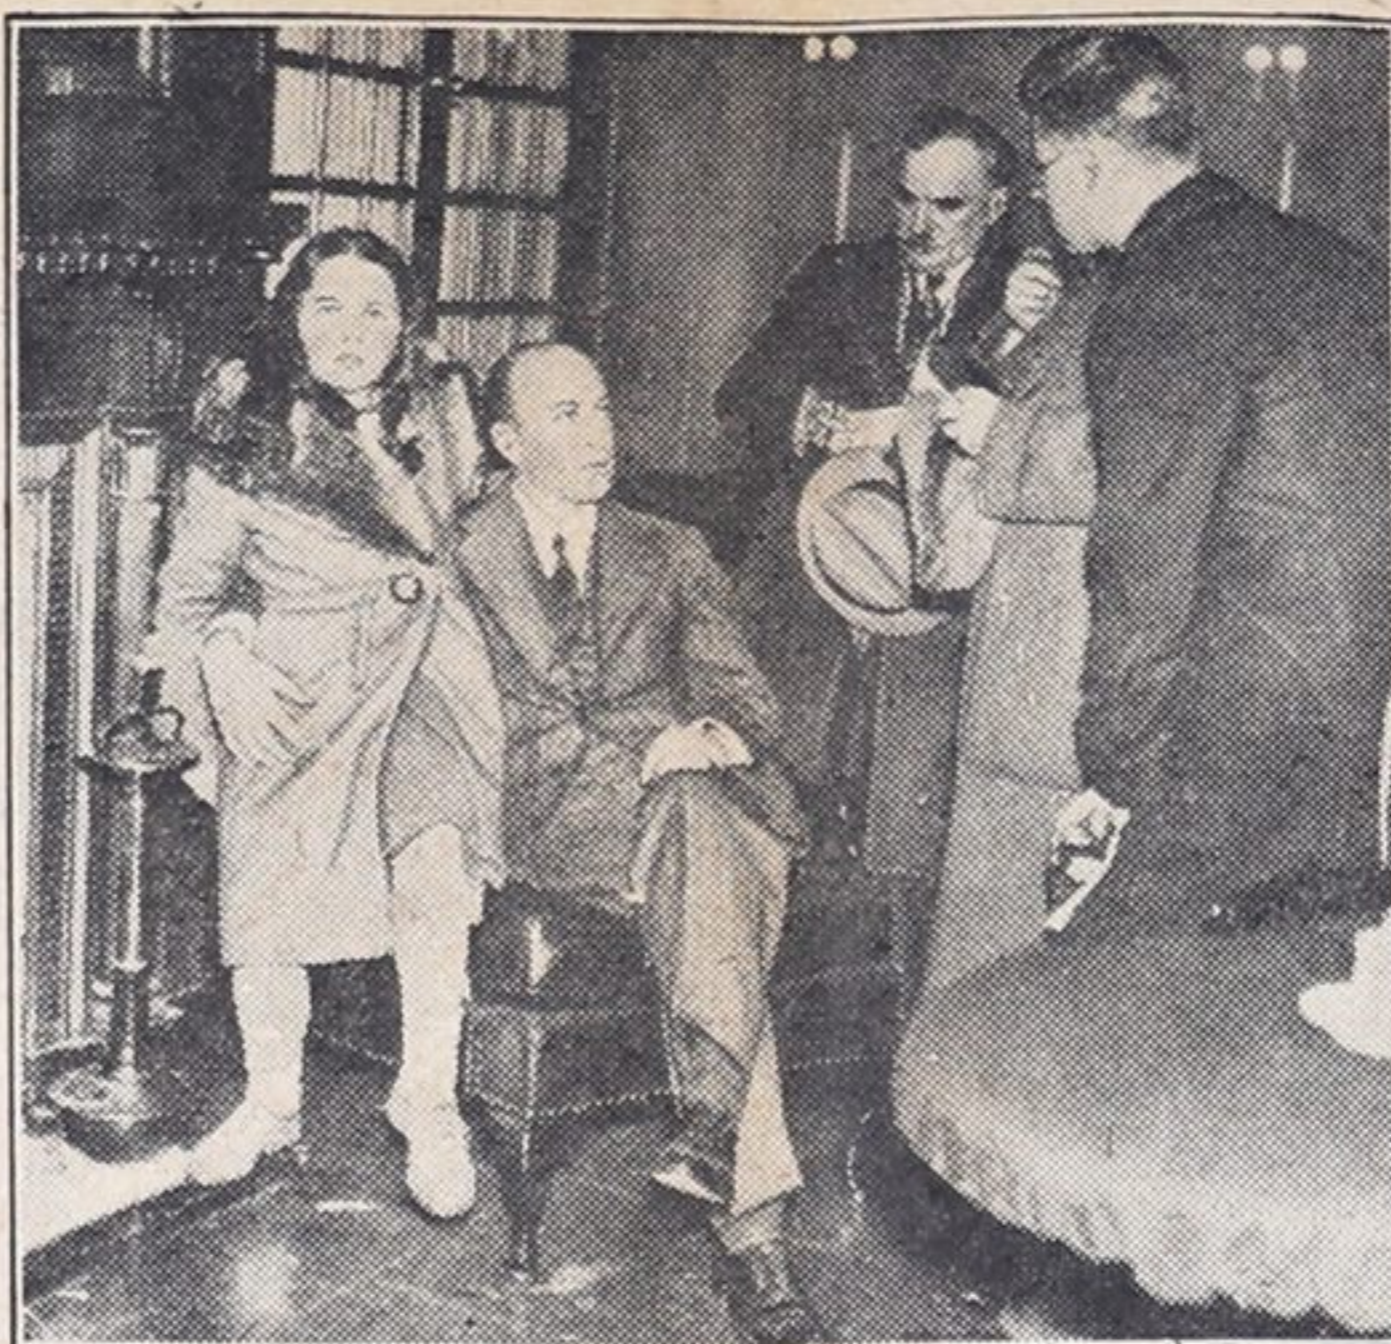

"Sure I killed her—I watched her die," is how, according to police, Ernest D'Iorio of Detroit, confessed slaying of Jennie Jablocki, nurse-maid. The purported confession asserts that D'Iorio slew a girl because she "was coming between Sonia and me." D'Iorio is shown after arrest with Sonia Morsejko, his sweetheart.

Life's Changing Outlook

Have you ever thought how insecure are the hopes and plans of the poor, who, dependent upon their daily earnings, find life's outlook so greatly changed when sickness comes? They bear a double cross, for in addition to physical suffering, poverty stares them in the face. There is one disease most dreaded by this class. It is consumption, which, fostered by their mode of life, preys upon them. Nourishing food, fresh air, rest, the only known cure, is beyond their means. What then is to be done? There is no alternative. They must be helped. The Toronto and Muskoka Hospitals for Consumptives with their new buildings, can give better service now than ever before, their only handicap being lack of sufficient funds. There are but few patients who can pay anything towards their keep. There is NOT ONE for whom the whole cost of maintenance is received. For the difference, amounting to many thousands of dollars in the year, these institutions must look to you and to other warm-hearted friends. Will you please send what you can to George A. Reid, Treasurer, 223 College Street, Toronto 2.

Held Service in Memory of Sir Arthur Currie

Veterans of Great War Attend Service of Remembrance On Sunday Night

"We are come to honor one to whom honor is due," said Rev. Canon Hincks in St. Paul's Church on Sunday evening, when a memorial service for the late Sir Arthur Currie was held there, with a number of veterans of the great war in attendance and the church given a semi-military appearance with the pulpit and lectern draped with flags and a miniature cenotaph placed in the centre of the aisle near the chancel. This cenotaph had been prepared by members of the Canadian Legion and was covered with a large Union Jack and had Deishrdlum base a wreath of poppies. Suitable hymns and prayers were included in the service, which closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

Speaking from the text, "The souls of the righteous are in the hands of God", found in the third chapter of Proverbs, Rev. Canon Hincks recalled some of the great qualities which marked the career of Sir Arthur Currie, "not only a great soldier, but a great man, with a high sense of honor and high ideals; one who looked on the men who served under him as brothers and one who was never willing to sacrifice lives needlessly." When peace came, the speaker said, Sir Arthur's supreme interest had been the welfare of those who came back, especially those who came back bearing the wounds of war. The cenotaph erected for the memorial service was but a symbol, but it called to mind the great cenotaph in the heart of the Empire, where at all hours of the day people paused to pay tribute to the men who had given their lives on the field of battle. It was only an empty vault, but it was symbolic of the Empire's dead, and so this cenotaph was symbolic of the one in whose memory the service was being held.

Canon Hincks asked his hearers to include in the service one who had lately gone from our own community and who had also served his king and country, the late Adam Keddie. "One of your own brothers in the Canadian Legion," he said, "and one whose memory should be honored as a soldier. We are not to think of them as banished from our midst, but we should cherish them in our memories and their example will inspire us to higher ideals and loftier purposes. We should think of them as having passed not into a life of inactivity, but rather as living a fuller and more active life of service, carrying on and striving for high ideals as they did in this life."

The speaker concluded with reminding his hearers of the glorious hope of the Resurrection to immortal life, a living hope inspired by the sure and certain promise of God Himself, and "with this hope and faith we commend the souls of those who have departed this life to His care."
