EDITORIALS

The joys and griefs of a small town newspaper are a little different to those experienced by our big city confreres.

This of course has started rumors that the editor is ashamed to put his name on the sheet, or that it is a sinister development, indicating that the Haileyburian is going to be sold to one of the newspaper chains that is notorious for snapping up papers and turning them into branch offices of their Toronto headquarters.

Nothing could be further from the truth. What happened was that we were short of staff, and away behind schedule. The editor came in late one evening to help the printer. Determined to show the printer that he, too, could make up a page, he picked up the tiny jumble of metal that makes up the masthead.

Of course, we should have reset it, but the paper was a day late then, so we said skip it. Then we closed down for a week, and when we reopened, we found that the printers had splashed the seven point magazine. We should have cleaned it out and set our masthead, but a social club wanted some tickets in a hurry, so we put service (and business) ahead of pride, and let it go again.

By the time this editorial is in print, we may have reset the masthead above this column. On the other hand, if the editor tries to help the printer much more often the column may not be printed either.

Another axiom of the weekly newspaper is that if an error is going to creep into the paper, or a printing job, the word misspelled is always the one word that can ruin a whole sentence. If someone makes a mistake on a printing job, it's never on Major Baloney Hoop's letter-heads, which we won't get paid for anyway, but on something for our most valued customer.

If a social note is lost, it's bound to be the one that someone went to a lot of trouble to bring into the office. If there's a mistake in an ad, it's nearly always the date or the price.

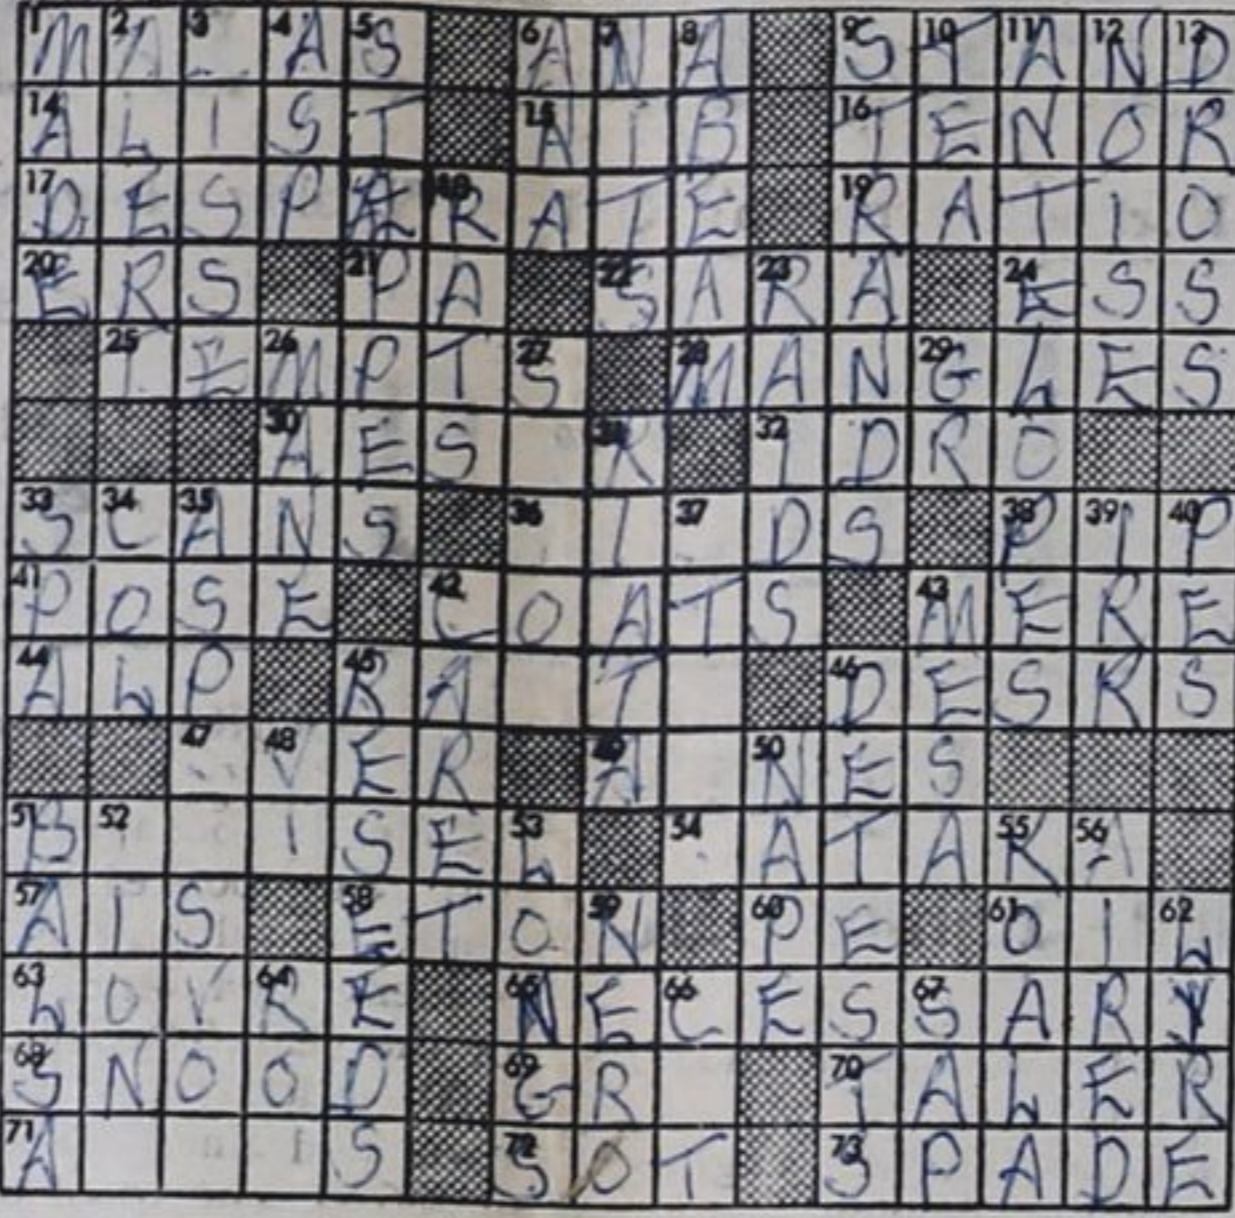

But, it's an interesting life. Newspaper editors are at least remarkable for few have so many people mad at them for such a variety of reasons.

HELP WANTED

Seeing that we have devoted most of our first editorial to ourselves, we might as well continue the process. Currently the Haileyburian is looking for someone to help in the office, as Evelyn Larabie who has helped out during the recent change-over, is going back to St Mary's Academy.

What we need is some responsible genius who is always neat and tidy, but doesn't mind

Across the Kitchen Table

By Mrs. Mac.

"She paints with words." If this be said of me, then may I despise raspberry jam, and I don't believe the worm powders did me any good, either

The result is that to this day I don't believe the worm powders did me any good, either

Do you ever wonder just what the words "a small town," mean? I read a definition of a small town, this week, that I thought was rather good; "A small town is one where, if a dog sits down in the middle of Main street to scratch a flea, the cars drive slowly around him and the dog just keeps on scratching."

I am quite sure that definition must have been written a long time ago, because it would be a brave dog, or person, who would dare to stand, much less sit, in the middle of any street, in any town with a population of more than twenty persons, in this day and hour.

If they did, I would guarantee that in two minutes flat, there would be a string of cars on both sides of them and a couple of motor cycles leaping over them, horns blowing and a few raucous voices demanding, "Hey, whaddya think yer doin'?"

The librarian, Mrs. J. W. Neelands, is back at her desk, after completing a four weeks intensive course in Librarianship, at Kingston.

Though a bus-man's holiday, Mrs. Neelands enjoyed every moment and hopes to offer an improved service to library patrons.

LIBRARY NOTES

getting covered in printing ink, shovelling ashes out of the furnace, sweeping the office, and cleaning the windows on Tuesdays.

She must be good at books as the publisher can't count, be able to type, keep records, write good letters, learn how to take printing orders, help out writing socials, weddings, accidents, murders and other news. If she can handle a camera she can take the odd picture, and if she can drive a truck and deliver goods, so much the better.

Furthermore she must be prepared to work for absolutely rotten wages until our contract is reduced. All applications will be carefully considered, and the line forms at the right.

THE LETTER BOX

North Cobalt, August 8, 1955.

The Editor, The Haileyburian, Haileybury, Ont. Dear Sir:

Much has been said and written about the present fire protection situation in the township of Bucke. It now appears likely that even if Haileybury offers to protect Bucke, the present council may ask the people to vote on the question.

As a long term resident of North Cobalt, and one who has played some part in Bucke's municipal affairs, I would like to appeal to the citizens of North Cobalt to vote for making an arrangement with Haileybury to protect all our township.

This is one occasion when North Cobalt, which has a majority of vote in Bucke, can show that it has the interest of all the township at heart.

Ordinary decency would dictate that we should support a measure designed to bring protection to all the township, North, West, South, and North Cobalt.

An arrangement with the Haileybury fire brigade is the only sensible solution to our problems. I sincerely hope that the people of North Cobalt will support the measure, together with their fellow taxpayers in the west and north ends of the township.

Yours faithfully, Harry Groom.

THANK YOU JANET

The Haileyburian, Haileybury, Ontario. Dear Sir:

My subscription does not run out until November, but I should like to re-new it now while giving you a change of address. I have enclosed the two-fifty ($2.50) for renewal for one year.

The address is now: Miss Janet Douglas, Box 174 Spiritwood, Sask. Good luck in the new venture! Sincerely, Janet Douglas.

THE REASONS WHY ?

BY WYMAN EDEY

A good friend of mine once asked me, "Why on earth are you in the grocery business." Sometimes I wonder too. There are few businesses like the grocery business, or at least the independent grocery business.

One of the big attractions is that you meet a lot of people, and you get a remarkable insight into their lives through this business. If Mrs. X. breaks a denture, then she'll stop buying crackers for a while. Mr. Y. lived in the tropics for a time, and is always asking for hot sauces and spices that are difficult to get.

An independent grocer has to watch prices carefully. Unlike the manager of the chain store, who only carries out orders, grocers like myself stand or fall by their ability to meet chain store prices by tough buying, haggling with salesmen, and watching the market like a hawk.

Sometimes we can't meet chain store prices, but it is surprising how often we can beat them across the broad average. We cannot afford to run "Specials" at a loss, but on the other hand, we don't add a few cents to a regular line to make up our loss on the "Special."

And the independent grocer has one advantage, he gives personal service, and can cater to the needs of his public. It's a tough business, but we don't think we would like to be in any other.

By the way, with the early growing season, tomatoes are plentiful and in good condition. I doubt if they will be any cheaper than they are at present. Until next week.....
