EDITORIALS

Haileyburians are invited to see the Algonquins at work. We have nothing but respect and admiration for the men and women who devote so much of their time to the reserve army, and to Canada's defence.

The present system of voluntary enlistment provides that in the event of war, a handful of volunteers, who represent the cream of the country's manhood, will be thrown into battle to hold back the enemy, until a sizeable army can be trained.

Just how much serious thinking has been done by residents of Northern Ontario on the question of defence. What will happen, if or when, some maniac in Moscow presses a button and sends guided missiles winging towards North America.

There are sufficient subversives in the North to ensure that the bridges at Latchford, Englehart and New Liskeard will probably be sabotaged, cutting off rail and road communications.

Guided missiles with atomic warheads will cross the Arctic and in all probability, destroy Toronto and Montreal. Thousands of refugees will flood the countryside, and there will be widespread looting.

Even if the missiles don't land in the North, the destruction of Toronto is almost certain, and Northern cities will be starved within a couple of weeks.

In the meantime the federal and provincial governments seem to be doing precisely nothing, except co-operate with the promotion department of a Toronto newspaper, which has erected an atomic age shelter in the front of the city hall.

And while the governments do nothing, a few volunteers like our own Algonquins appear to be the only people worried about defence, or doing anything about it.

EDITORIAL

Now that the tourist season is declining, Haileyburians are facing up to another influx of visitors. Amiable enough creatures, and well dressed too, they are well known exponents of Mr. Nehru's policy of non-aggression.

Just how to deal with a skunk is a question that has perplexed better brains than ours for many years. A brave man will promise his wife that he will get rid of the pests from beneath his home, and sally forth with shotgun or club.

If he is a mighty enough hunter, and his nasal sensibilities are not too refined, he may carry out his boast. His next major problem is to persuade the little women to allow him back in the house.

Possibly the only solution is one of live and let live. And if, on a moonlight night, when a gentle mist is stealing across the garden, a scent arises that doesn't emanate from the roses, it's time for bed anyway.

The LETTER BOX

The Editor, The Haileyburian, Dear Sir:

Surely it is about time the electors in Bucke asked some searching questions about the money each succeeding council spends in the search for water.

At a recent council meeting some peculiar figures were given about the costs of drilling. It seems that each council wants to find water, but never in the same place or in the same way that the council before it.

Yours truly, Bucke Ratepayer.

FISHING AT EXHIBITION

Hot weather may keep trout from biting in the lakes and streams, but at the Canadian National Exhibition it will be good fishing all the time. Open season on brook and rainbow trout at the CNE will be August 26 to September 10, every day the Ex. is open.

More than 1,000 of the finest trout will be put in a large tank in the Coliseum by the Berkshire Trout Farm, Sheffield, Mass. The tank will be almost 100 feet long and 30 feet wide, but will be just two feet deep.

For a small fee, anglers will be supplied with rods and flies and allowed 15 minutes in which to try to catch their limit of three fish. All fish will be more than eight inches long. Fresh supplies of fish will be brought in on tank trucks as the supply in the pool is fished out.

Across the Kitchen Table

By Mrs. Mac.

Today's doctors, with their skill and knowledge of modern drugs, can perform miracles, but only if we enlist their aid when upsetting symptoms are first noticed.

A statement made by a doctor, about fifteen years ago, when speaking to a group of Institute women on the subject of cancer, has remained in my memory ever since.

So let's all try to take care of our health while we have it instead of afterward.

When you are shopping for your children's clothes, do you look for garments that will make dressing himself easier for the child, or do you just buy anything that you think will look and wear reasonably well?

The stretchy type of nylon hose that stretches to fit different sizes is becoming quite popular now.

When one grows up as an only child, it is a wonderful thing to marry a man who has eight sisters and thirteen cousins, and a short time ago I realized all over again, just how true it is.

We went to Renfrew, in that Ottawa Valley that is renowned for hospitality and friendliness, to a family reunion held to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the purchase of the family homestead.

The fact that my father-in-law, who was ninety years old last April, came down with us and visited his old friends, and told tales of his boyhood on the farm made the trip doubly enjoyable.

A diary and record of every purchase made while he lived on the farm, was kept by the original owner, and carefully preserved, makes interesting reading. He also recorded the births, and marriages of his own family and those of his neighbors.

One sometimes wonders why there is so much of the "you must belong to my church and believe as I do or you can't be one of God's chosen", sort of attitude. Surely Christ's commandment was to believe in Him and to use our neighbor justly, and personally, I do not think He cares which road, or church, we get to Heaven on, so long as we conduct ourselves as we should while we travel along.

Does housework get you down? Most of us feel that it does, at some time or other, but a recent survey found that the women who are most tired by housework are not always the ones who work hardest, or who do the most work.

The advice that was given to overcome the trouble was first, to stop dreading it before you tackle it, second, get rid of the clutter systematically, room by room, and then stay rid of it by having the courage to give away, or throw away, things that are no longer of any use to you or your family.

And the third rule is, decide what jobs must be done that day and do them first.

There are so many nice things in life to remember that it seems too bad that all too often we remember and speak of the unpleasant ones instead. I remember reading once, of a family who found themselves getting into this habit of forgetting the nice things and so they decided to write down each nice thing that happened, or any thing that gave them pleasure during the day, and then compared notes in the evening.

There are so many simple things, such little things, that can give such lovely memories, the formation of a cloud, the moonlight shining through the branches of a tree, or marking a path of silver across the lake, a child's laughter, the satiny blossoms on a rosebush, or the memory of a friendship treasured through the years.

Reading of the miracles that are being performed in plastic and bone surgery nowadays, one sometimes wonders if the time will ever come when we can trade our bodies in on new models instead of wearing out. If a knock or murmur is heard in the motor of our car, it is immediately taken to the garage for a check-up, or if the radio develops an annoying squeak, (and I don't mean the announcer, he seems to be a necessary evil,) the services of an expert are called for right away, but our own "motors" that are ten times more precious than any we can buy, are often neglected until they are beyond repair.

Good health is a gift of God and we should appreciate it enough to do all in our power to keep it.

I have often said that a sense of humor is a marvelous gift, and it seems to me that most of the pioneers of this north country have been blessed with remarkable humor all their lives. A few weeks ago, I heard someone ask one of these pioneers how long he had been in this area and his answer was, "Oh, I've been here a long time, they were just digging the lake when I came, they hadn't turned the water into it."
