In reading a news release regarding the coast to coast tour that is being taken in August by a party of "high-ranking officers and government officials" from the British commonwealth and the Imperial Defence College when one of their stops will be at the first St. Lawrence powerhouse unit in action, I couldn't help wishing that some of the "lower-ranking workers" who risked their lives to make this wonderful project possible, couldn't be given some recognition also. But I suppose they, like most of the workers in cases like this, are the "unsung heroes."

One of the old timers dropped into the Haileybury office last week to renew his subscription to the paper and have a chat about the early days. He was Mr. Poppleton of Timmins who has many tales to tell of the days when C.C. Farr working for the advancement of the town. He says Mr. Farr loved everything on four feet and most on two, except news and he disliked them.

One evening last week, a young couple parked in the driveway of the girls home were discussing wolves, (not the two legged variety) when they heard a scratching at the door of the car and were rather disconcerted to see, looking in the window, a head that strongly resembled that of a wolf. But it turned out to be the neighbor's police dog and after satisfying himself that all was well inside the car, he ambled off.

A few minutes ago I went into the back office and found Mr. Hunt chortling with glee over the "composing sticks" he was using. It seems that Miss. Louise MacArthur had presented him with a set of them that had belonged to her father and had been brought by him from Scotland, many years ago. The mere fact that they came from Scotland should make them better than average. But, anyway the fact remains that he is using them and says that although they may be old fashioned, they are easier to use and his thanks go to Miss. MacArthur for her much appreciated gift.
