The Rambling Reporter

Sunday marks the start of the "DON'T" days for motorists of Ontario. It is the day the new system of demerit marks comes into effect that will probably mean within a short period of time that many motorists will have their driving licenses suspended for various periods. To some it may not take long to accumulate the 12 points which will mean the lifting of their license—others will not get very many if any. If it has the effect of cutting down on the number of accidents it will be well worth the added cost. If it means the saving of lives, it will be worth it no matter what the cost. With Ontario highways as crowded as they are today, and the ever increasing number of accidents, something had to be done and it is quite possible that Ontario has come up with something that will work. Of course two years is only a reasonable period in which to gather the twelve demerit marks—we know some that could accumulate them in a much shorter period without half trying. On the other hand, if the system works the way it is expected to work, it should mean a reduction in automobile insurance rates—we hope. We suppose that there will be those that will take a chance on driving without a license (after suspension) just as there are today. Some means will probably have to be found to more strictly enforce this phase of operations, which has been a problem for some years.

One small group of New Liskeard fishermen had more than fishermen's luck last week in spite of the cold weather. They were successful in landing a total of (well the limit anyway) of Lake trout. Sure the going was tough, more than three hours on snow shoes for the hike in—an uncomfortable night when they didn't cut enough wood to keep themselves warm until morning and the thermometer dropping to better than 20 below, but still they didn't seem to mind it when the fish started biting pretty good, and then the long hike back to the highway packing their catch, still they figure it was worth it—and we guess it was.

The only persons wearing a smile these days seem to be the boys who are peddling fuel. While we haven't heard many reports of them working too much overtime to keep the residents supplied they have sure had to hustle to keep up with the demand. The latter applies only to the oil and coal dealers, or course, but Sam Kearns is wearing a smile just the same as the gas meters klick a little faster as the bottom falls out of the thermometers and the wind start to howl. And while the frost is heavy in the air and the smoke drifts upward, out at Elk Lake the boys are starting to plan for the 50th Anniversary of the little community that back in 1909 started to lay plans for a large centre and then saw their hope kind of fade away as the silver boom in and around them and at Gowganda seemed to fade away. Lumbering took its place to some extent and now in the summer and fall the tourist industry helps to keep the community going. In spite of the smallness of its size, the residents do not intend to let their 50th birthday pass by unnoticed. But more about this later.
