Dog Days

It seems no matter how some people are warned, their dogs are still on the loose running all over and getting away with it while others are forced to keep theirs within their premises.

Running and barking after cars, which can easily cause an accident while the motorist is trying to avoid them and also it is most annoying to persons trying to get their rest listening to them bark, especially in the early hours of the morning which has been happening lately.

These being what they call (Dog Days) it is particularly dangerous to have them running loose among the children at the Park and beach as they get cross and snappy, especially in hot weather.

If one keeps up with the news they will note that ever so often a child is bitten this time of year, sometimes seriously.

If the citizens who own dogs would keep them at home and co-operate with the council instead of more or less defying them to make them do it, trouble and money both would be saved.

I See by THE PAPERS

SAN DIEGO, Calif. (AP) — Charles Coval, a missile engineer had his own private rainstorm Sunday - in a 20-foot square area without a cloud in the sky.

Impossible, said the weather bureau.

"I know it sounds screwy," said Coval, "but I can't find the source any place else. It's got to be rain."

He checked neighbors' sprinkling systems and the water company said there were no mains out in the area.

The rain began at 6 a.m. and continued most of the day.

The San Diego Union sent reporter Joe Brown to investigate. He reported back to the newspaper that it looks like rain, tastes like rain and, in his opinion, is rain.

But 20 feet away—and everywhere else in San Diego—there was no rain.

WHITEHORSE, Y.T. (CP) — Mrs. Clive Boyd, using a rifle for the second time in her life, bagged a skulking bear that tried to steal fish from a barrel in her backyard.

Mrs. Boyd, whose husband is a construction worker, brought down the animal with two shot. She said she didn't think much about the correct way to hold the gun. All she thought of was what the bear would do.

ROTTERDAM, Netherlands (Reuters)—Aida, an elephant at the zoo here, in a single day ate without any apparent ill-effect: 1,706 handfuls of peanuts, 198 sandwiches, 891 chunks of bread, 516 gum drops, 814 peppermints, toffees and liquorice, 811 biscuits, seven ice cream bars, 17 apples, 198 slices of orange, one meat ball, one leather glove, 16 pieces of paper, two small tree branches and a shoelace.

Total weight of food—approximately 126 lbs.

BOMBAY (AP) — Fifty thousand head of cattle were reported swimming helplessly in flooded areas of the Kutch Peninsula of northwest India. Several hundred herdsmen were said to have taken refuge in treetops. The government is arranging to parachute in supplies and is also sending relief by special detachments of mounted police.

STANTON HILL, England (CP) —The last film shown at the movie theatre in this Nottinghamshire town before it closed was "A Kiss

Before Dying."

BARRIE (CP) — Ontario Highways Minister Cass experienced a "shocking thing to happen to a minister of highways." He got lost on his own roads.

Mr. Cass related the story when he eventually arrived for the official opening of a new bridge which carries Highway 90 over the Nottawasaga River some 10 miles southwest of here.

The minister was unable to find signs for the cutoff from Highway 400. He asked a service station attendant.

"That's what they all ask," said the attendant.

I wouldn't be surprised to see some signs up here very soon indeed," commented Mr. Cass.

KINCARDINE (CP) — Motorists aren't the only ones to get demerit points for highway infractions in this town.

Police Chief Earl Wrightson has devised a plan of demerit points for bicyclists. Twelve demerits mean use of the bike is withdrawn for a week.

NEW YORK (AP) — Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller told a nationwide television audience Sunday night he might, under certain circumstances, run for the presidential nomination in 1960.

JOHANNESBURG (Reuters) — Snow mantled the Drakensberg Mountains from the Transvaal to Natal as a freak cold snap hit South Africa recently.

WEMBLEY, England (CP) — The early-morning thief who has been knocking over milk bottles on doorsteps in the Middlesex town was exposed as a hedgehog. Residents watched for cats, dogs and birds before spotting the hedgehog.

ADELAIDE, Australia (Reuters) — A conscience-smitten burglar, who fumbled an attempt to blow an insurance office safe, phoned a warning to police. They found gelignite jammed in the lock. The explosive might have gone off had a key been turned.

TORONTO (CP)—Judy O'Leary of Calgary is the only woman in Canada who is currently studying meteorology.

This summer she is enrolled in a class of 38, taking a training course for government meteorologists. All the other students are men.

Miss O'Leary was selected for the course after taking her senior year in the bachelor of science degree at the University of Alberta. She spent the first five weeks of the seven-month government course at RCAF Station, Trenton, Ontario.

ANATOMY OF A MURDER

By Robert Traver

Paul Biegler felt his world had come to an end that Sunday in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan when he got back from fishing and from thinking about the future. He was forty. After his ten years as the small town D.A. and local hero, the people had found and elected a new hero, a young veteran of foreign wars. Then the telephone rang. Laura Manion told him her husband had been jailed for suspected murder. She said that Barney Quill, the man her husband had shot had criminally assaulted her.

Perhaps this case was Biegler's providence. Outwardly sardonic and cynical, he could certainly show his young rival, Mitch, who had won from him the only job he loved, as well as the State Prosecutor's whole staff, that he could defend better than they could prosecute. Idealist beneath his flippant shell he loved the law. Even this man caught red-handed would stay innocent until a jury could be found to declare him guilty. Biegler knew a great deal about juries. It was Biegler's last chance of making a new beginning for himself. And yet could he believe his client or his client's attractive wife? Beneath the placid surface, the small town seethes and boils with deep and primitive drives as events, like the jetsam in the river rapids, sweep toward the great trial. The plan of defense is explored and assembled in Biegler's mind and in the mind of his ancient legal crony, Parnell McCarthy. One by one the lesser characters become enmeshed, frequently to their surprise and occasionally to their horror," in Biegler's anatomy of the murder.

Biegler dislikes the cool and egotistical Frederick Manion increasingly as he becomes progressively more devoted to his defense. He cannot fully trust Manion's beautiful wife. He loses his heart to the enigmatic Mary Pilant before he can determine her role in the dead man's life. The vain and brawling Barney Quill, now dead, who in the intervals of his main occupation—the pursuit and capture of women—ran a resort hotel, grows even more vivid than when he was alive. The relentless prosecutor, Claude Dancer, is ever more ruthless and more cunning. Judge Weaver, from his patient contemplation of the secrets of mankind, emerges calm and wise, the personality on whom Biegler gambles for success.

With authority and assured command, Robert Traver, himself a lawyer, who can write, tells a most original and unforgettable story in which the prosecution and the defense battle for the prize of a man's freedom. Here is an atmosphere that is the very essence of a small Midwestern town, salty and tangy in its speech. This book breeds a new respect for the process of the law and an increased awareness of the drama of a lone man pitted against the massed resources of the State.

Whirly-Bird In Haileybury

Spartan Air Services caused a stir in Haileybury last week when they dropped down on the town park with their huge Vertol 42 Helicopter. The craft was making a scheduled stop for refueling and one of the local oil dealers was on hand with two 45 gallon tanks of fuel for the job.

The copter which is one of the largest of its type in use was proceeding from a strategic defence zone somewhere north of Moosonee, to Ottawa at the time of refueling. The flight plan included a scheduled stop at Haileybury and one at North Bay. Because of the copters size it is forced to make frequent stops for fuel.

Pilot Doc Demerah and his copilot Paul Ladouceur, were carrying an undisclosed cargo from the secret defence area to headquarters in Ottawa.

New Song Birds For The North

Is northern Ontario becoming warmer, or are birds becoming more curious? Among recent reports to the Department of Lands and Forests here are these: A pair of mocking birds were seen in the town of Sioux Lookout. Known range of the birds is usually 400 miles south. A large water bird from the Waubaushene area was identified by Department officials as a double crested cormorant. While common in the eastern part of Lake Ontario, Parry Sound and Severn River areas, it is seldom seen around Waubaushene. A swan which appeared to have a broken wing was sighted at Mile 152 on the Algoma Central Railway north of Sault Ste. Marie. When officials tried to capture it, it flew away without difficulty. It was tentatively identified as a trumpeter swan, of which there are very few in North America.

Members of the Nipissing Naturalists' Club identified 32 species of birds on the Little French River; among nests found were those of ospreys, song sparrows, least flycatcher, white-throated sparrow.
