

High School Girl

The jury attached a recommendation to their verdict as follows: whereas school children may get a false feeling of security from legislation which makes cars stop behind the bus, we suggest that children should be instructed not to leave the side of the road until the bus has moved on and the road is clear in both directions. These instructions should be given at school, with signs in the bus and by the bus driver.

Coroner A. C. Farlinger and Magistrate George Black of Kirkland Lake heard witnesses tell of the tragic death of the young girl.

Dr. Fraser Farlinger gave the medical evidence which established that the girl had died from the head injuries she had received.

Harvey McNaughton, who has been driving a school bus for eight years identified her as the girl who had ridden in the school bus, told that all had received instructions regarding alighting from the vehicle and crossing the road.

He described the yellow carrier, with its large black "school bus" marking on back and front. He said he saw the approaching car, but did not see it strike the girl as he pulled away. He did not think that Mr. Leveille was exceeding the legal speed limit. He also said that he had pulled up a short distance past the sideroad where the girl customarily alighted.

Douglas McNeil saw the accident from his car which he had stopped a few feet behind the bus. "She ran past the rear of the bus, directly into the path of the car which was swinging away from her as she was struck." He also judged that the car driver was not speeding.

Samuel Knott, driver of a small truck was stopped behind the McNeil car when the accident occurred. He also said the girl was running to cross the road at the time the accident occurred. He said that she didn't look either way. He said that he thought the driver did everything possible to avoid the accident.

Coroner A. C. Farlinger in his summary for the jury said there seemed to be a general impres-

Advertising

The Department of Motion Picture Censorship pays close attention to all advertising associated with film entertainment. It is the only province in English speaking Canada which scrutinizes every piece of advertising. During the year terminating March 1959, it reviewed 28,216 specimens of advertising rejecting 528 and insisting on the treatment of 82 pieces.

It recognizes that views and reading matter in advertising remain fixed before the reader, while the subject matter to which the advertising pertains will flash before the patron's view in the theatre leaving several different interpretations. Consequently the effect of advertising may be more definite and dangerous than the film content.

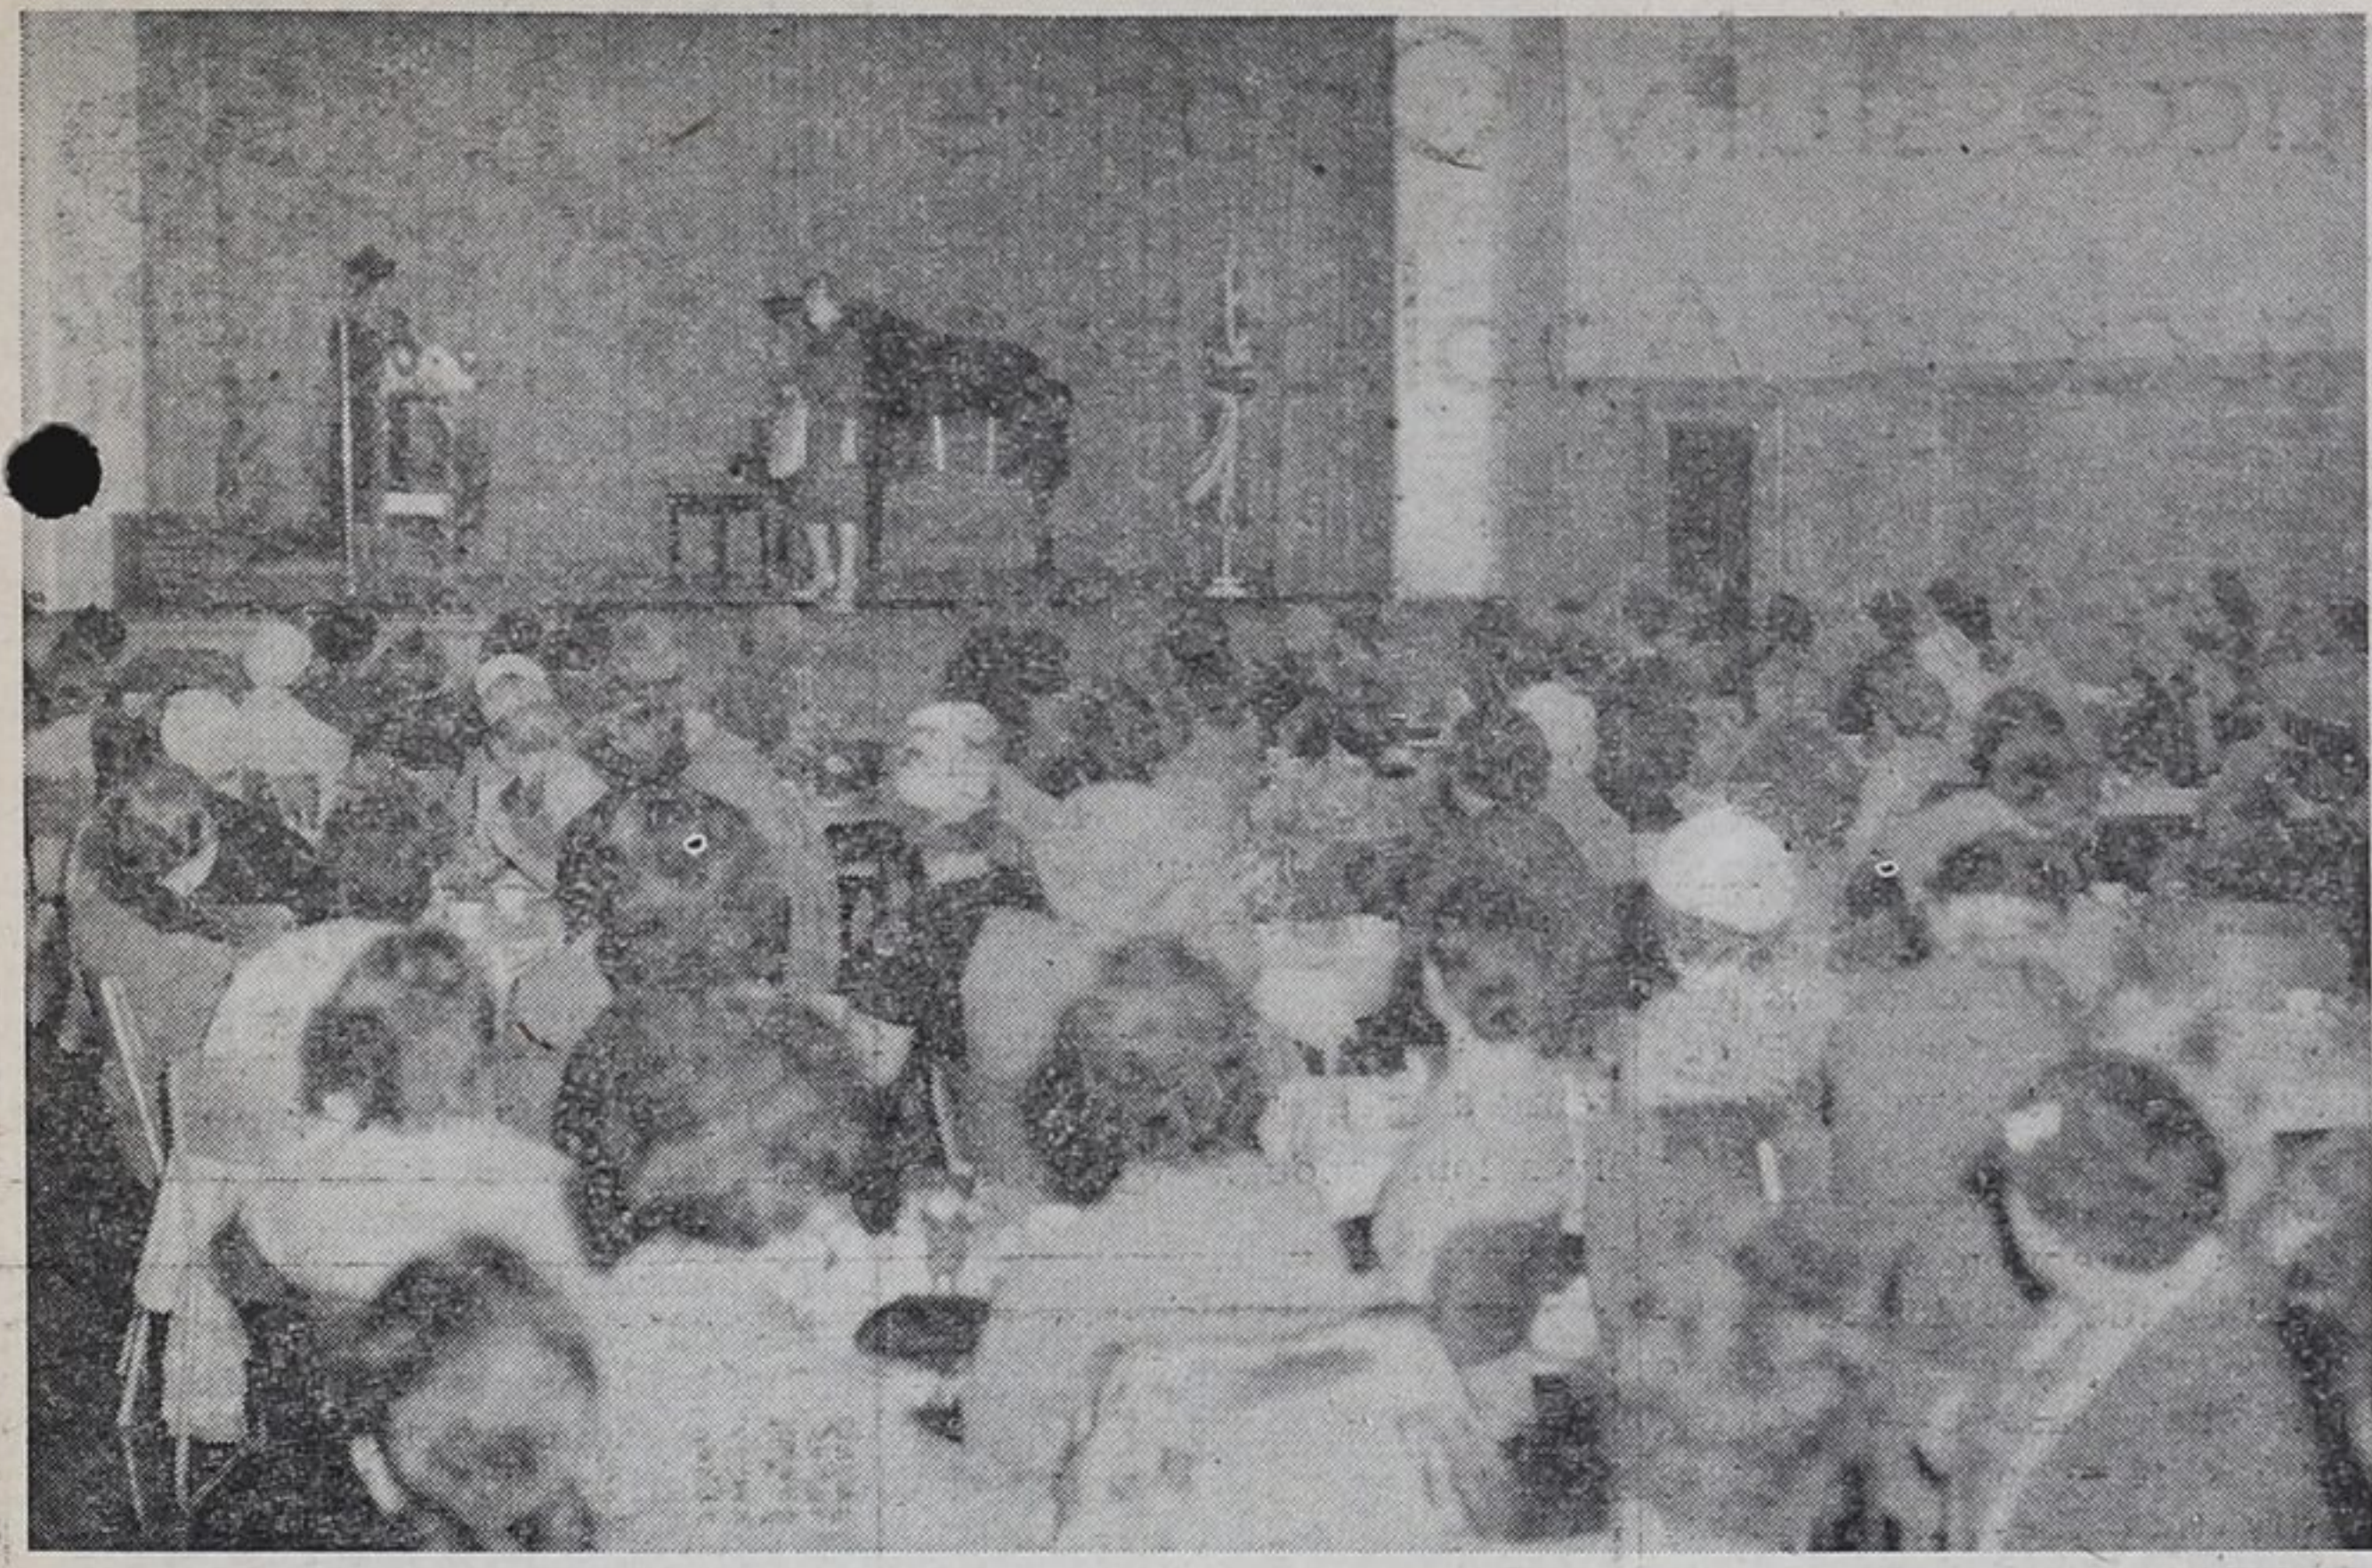

On occasions it has found there has been no relation between the advertising and film content. It has met with instances of undue license. It has found that promotion associated with the Restricted film has been generally within the realm of taste and decency.

An attitude of the Department toward advertising is that while it might only be distasteful to the adult mind, it can be definitely dangerous to the susceptible impressionable adolescent and child, particularly when the child comes from a broken home or is lacking in parental guidance. It has been estimated that possibly 4,000,000 children in the U.S. fall into this category. Current economic conditions are such that the number will not diminish.

sion that the girl was running. He also said that the sideroad was slightly south of the rear of the bus, and in crossing the road she would be turned south and west.

The driver of the car Mr. Leveille spoke through an interpreter and said that he had been driving for 21 years.

"I saw the bus stop when I was about 250 feet away and slowed down some without touching the brake. I saw the girl when I was about 25 feet away from her and applied the brakes, but I could not avoid hitting her." His car ended its swing in the west ditch. Mrs. Leveille was also a passenger in the car.
