

Across the Kitchen Table

By MRS. MAC

For the last few days, every time I've looked out of the office window, the air has been so full of floating dandelion fuzz that it almost made me think it was snowing. The dandelion is a cheery little blossom when it first shows its bright color in the spring, but, oh, my spotted hands and weary back, when I have to dig them out of the lawn and flower beds. And if you don't get all the roots, they come up twice as energetically the second time.

Everything in the garden and flower beds is just shooting up. My iris have never been so beautiful, and I have five new colors blooming this year for the first time. And my roses, that I worried about all last winter, because I didn't get time last fall to prepare them properly for the cold weather, came through without a single fatality, are covered with buds and should be in full bloom by the time the iris are finished. I have twenty-five rose bushes, twenty different varieties, and this morning (Wednesday) I picked the first bloom of the season, a dainty little semi-double pink one.

Early next month I will be playing nursemaid to a budgie. Over the years when my family go a-holidaying, I fall heir to the family pets. So far, I have had a dog, a cat, several kittens, a huge black rabbit named "Coalminer", and now, the budgie. I have had canaries of my own, but never a budgie, so I am looking forward to making the acquaintance of "Pierre" and keeping my fingers crossed in the hope that I'll know how to care for him properly.

A week from tomorrow will be the first of July. Half the year gone! Only six months till Christmas!

Gas War

A gasoline war flared up in Cobalt and Haileybury, although the price cutting hasn't spread to New Liskeard.

It all started, according to some dealers, when one Cobalt service station started giving four cents discount 'under the counter'.

The nearest competitor got mad and advertised at 46.9 cents and the battle was joined. In Haileybury the dealers have gone even further, with gas being sold at 46 cents even in the downtown section.

New Liskeard dealers are hoping to keep the gas war from spreading this far, particularly as it has nearly ruined several dealers in the Timmins area. In Cobalt and Haileybury the dealers are hoping for a summit conference to iron out their differences.

Two seconds later, did he still believe in luck?

Two seconds later, this man suddenly realized that being lucky isn't enough protection from the threat of accident.

This experience made him all the more aware of the value of the Accidental Death and Dismemberment Benefit he had added to his $10,000 Confederation Life Policy.

Less than 6 cents a day provides his wife with substantial extra protection in the form of an additional $10,000 if he dies by accident—and $20,000 if he is killed while a passenger in a public vehicle (plane, train, ship, bus, taxi or streetcar).

Consider that accidents are the greatest single killer of men below age 35. In 1958, over 15% of ordinary death claim payments made by Confederation Life were for accidental deaths. Doesn't it make good sense to give your family the double and triple protection of a low-cost Accidental Death and Dismemberment Benefit?
