A Young Man Who Wants Advice. It was the second time he had accompanied the young lady home from singing school, one of those little social parties which are gotten up to bring fond hearts a stop here to each other. When they reached the gate she asked him if he wouldn't come in. He said he would, and he followed her into the house. "It was a calm, still night," and the hour was so late that he had no fear of seeing the old folks. Sarah took his hat, told him to sit down, and she left the room to lay off her things. She was hardly gone before her mother came in, smiled sweetly, and "dropping" down beside the young man she said: "I always did say that if a poor but respectable young man fell in love with Sarah he should have my consent. Some mothers would sacrifice their daughter's happiness for riches, but I am not one of that class." The young man gave a start of alarm. He didn't know whether he liked Sarah or not, and he had not dreamed of such a thing as marriage. "She has acknowledged to me that she loves you," continued the mother, "and whatever is for her happiness is for mine." The young man gave two starts of alarm this time, and he felt his cheeks grow pale. "I haven't," he stammered, when she said: "Oh, never mind. I know you haven't much money, but of course you'll live with me. We take in boarders, and I'll risk but what we'll get along all right." It was a bad situation. He hadn't even looked love at Sarah, and he felt that he ought to undeceive the county. "I hadn't no idea of—of—" he stammered, when she held up her hands and said: "I know you hadn't, but it's all right with your wages and what the boarders bring in we shall get along as snug as bugs in a rug." "But madam, but—" "An' I think that you be good to her," interrupted the mother. "Sarah has a tender heart and a loving nature, and if you should be cross and ugly it would break her down within a week." The young man's eyes stood out like coconuts in a show window, and he rose up and tried to say something. He said: "Great heavens! madame I can't permit—" "Never mind about the thanks," she interrupted. "I don't believe in long courteships myself, and let me suggest an early day for the marriage. The 30th of September is my birthday, and it would be nice for you to be married on that day." "But—but—" he gasped. "There, there, I don't expect any speech in reply," she laughed. "You and Sarah fix it up to-night, and I'll advise for twelve boarders right away. I'll try and be a model mother-in-law. I believe I am good-natured and kind-hearted, though I did once follow a young man two hundred miles and shoot the top of his head off for agreeing to marry Sarah and then jumping the county." She patted him on the head and sailed out, and now the young man wants advice. He wants to know whether he had better get in the way of a locomotive or slide off the wharf.
