WOMEN'S RIGHTS.

When the ladies shall vote like the men, Och! 'twon't poll be a bloomin' Will others and ornamental Election day, thin, I am thinkin', Will be the grand day of the year—Will the uses and laws will be drinkin' Together the agitator's beer.

What's the use to wrangle wid Biddy, About who the best of the make,
An' shro, if 'twill pass her, I'm riddy To give up the best for her sake;
An' she stayin' all day in the shanty,
To find to domestic affairs,
A bill, the beef and prates,
An' makin' the rips and the tears.

Thin, when the election approaches, An' the lasses are marchin' the strato, An' sit by her side on the stand;
An' Biddy is standin' the trate, I'll be the sidewalk burmin'
An' she stayin' all day in the shanty,
To find to domestic affairs,
A bill, the beef and prates,
An' makin' the rips and the tears.

Such a charming sight! I marred only by Ralph's absence. I always think of it as a season of wondrous peace and calm happiness. I visited alternately at father Brooks', and my own dear father's, and in a gay circle of brothers, sisters, cousins, etc., spent a couple of weeks delightfully. I had not heard from Ralph for almost a week; what could it mean? He was to come for us toward the close of my visit, but that was distant a week or two, unless, as he tenderly said, he bidding good-bye, he grew too lonely without his pets, and if so he'd come sooner. But a sense of impending evil oppressed me; I grew restless, and so much did this feeling grow upon me, that when a week elapsed without a letter, I announced my intention of returning immediately to Westville. I was at father Brooks', and they all joined in joking me for getting home sick, and said that Ralph would probably arrive before night, and laughed at my firm conviction that he was ill. But all persuasion failing to convince me, father and mother Brook said they would go home with me. I believed I had inoculated them with my fears, which grew so upon me that every minute seemed drawn into the length of an hour. We were on the way at last in the old carriage, having sent a note to our hurried departure. The old horse refused to pass the time chatting pleasantly, but my heart was heavy with its sad foreboding, and they began to be less cheerful as we approached Westville without meeting Ralph. We entered the store without a letter, and not surprised that some whom we met regarded us, I thought, curiously. They are looking at the woman who was visiting when her husband sick, perhaps dying. I thought, "As we approached the house I observed, without surprise that the store was closed, and a slow step coming through the hall attracted us, and I thought some kind neighbor was staying with Ralph. The door opened; it was Ralph himself, a little downcast looking, but alive and well. With a glad cry I sprang to his arms, and for the first time in my life wept hysterically.
Ralph carried me into the parlor while welcoming his parents, and expressing joy at our opportune arrival, explaining his silence by saying he was busy, but meant to have started for his fathers that evening. But something was back, we felt that soon it came out, for their could ill keep his business "But why is your store closed?" Ralph, and everything so still!
"What means it?"
"It means, dear mother," said Ralph, with a sad smile, "that your boy has failed in his business he undertook with such faith in his abilities, that he has lost the capital given by a kind father, in fine, been sold out by the sheriff, and to-day is penniless, nay worse."
"Well, I deuced," said his mother, as he declared, "if you didn't frighten me as much as Lizzie did when she persuaded us that you were sick or dead. Well, 'Til tell you the truth, Ralph, I am not one bit sorry, for since Myra has gone the old house seems that lonely that your father and I can hardly bear to stay in it, and now after Lizzie's visit, I don't think we could have stayed at all. You see" she continued, "it's just providence for if you would have prospered here you never would have gone to the old home again, and I never did like that Westville," she added, with sudden asperity, "as if the place was in some way responsible for our failure."

But mother laughed and said:
"When we get you there see when I'll get away again."
"Dear kind parents! not a word of our carelessness and extravagance, no wise savings and hints of self-sufficiency that needed no council. Nothing but tenderness, and during the years that we made one family I found no difference. For myself, joy that Ralph was spared to me, made all else seem so trifling that I could not realize it as a misfortune. But as we viewed our past life we saw many things needing careful attention which seemed of very little importance, before, and humbly we knelt and implored for giveness for all our many failings to day, and while we placed ourselves under the Divine protection, and resolved to begin a new life, peace descended to our chastened hearts, as we determined that none should suffer through us."

Next day being the Sabbath, we attended church as usual, and although a few were quite as cordial as usual, candor compels me to say that the majority kept aloof as though fearing some contagious disease. Eddy grew restless during the sermon, and not wishing to interrupt the congregation, I quietly withdrew, and, seated in the shade of a fine tree, was enjoying the quiet, when I was attracted by the sound of a low tone carried on in a low tone between two old ladies who were also enjoying the cool air outside the church and at the same time enjoying a little gossip about their neighbors. Seated with their backs to me, I could not avoid hearing all they said.

"He couldn't be brakin' up if he was as rich as Girard" said one, "with such a wife as he has. I believe he tried to do as well as he could; but law sakes, with her silk and finery, to say nothing of her good for nothin' lazy ways, no man could go along. I do not honestly believe that woman went near the kitchen once a month." Hetty Marvin had full sway, and you know whether you or me would trust our kitchen to the Marvins. I know what I know, though I never mentioned it to any one living. But Mrs. Marvin had more tea, sugar, and coffee, too, in her house now I say, and it didn't cost her anything either. Between you and me, Mrs. Briggs, I may say it, Mr. Brooks' kept Marvin's family as well as his own; but that's his affair. Of course, and she waxed warmer with the subject, "if he can afford to keep her a-sit-tin' in her lookin' chair, or thumpin' her piano, he may, but his own get rich at that I do know. Then her company; well, I like to go to see my friends, and I like to have them come to see me, but such housefuls of company as she'd have, the 'biggest bugs' in the place, too."

"Mrs. Perkins forgot, or seemed to forget how often she dropped in to tea, and seemed then to consider me a real nice little woman, not a bit 'stuck up,' to use her own expressive language."
"Well," she continued, "such goings on ain't for nothin', as I tell Mr. Perkins, but a man's wife life him up or puts him down, and says I "where would you be, Mr. Perkins, if you had a wife like Mr. Brooks'?"
"What Mr. Perkins might do under the circumstances I never knew for Eddy, waking just then, cried a little, and both ladies looking round, and discovering who their neighbor was, started to their feet. Mrs. Perkins remarking, "I feel better now, Sister Briggs, had not we better go in?" and both the old ladies whipped past me and entered the church in time to join the last prayers, which I have no doubt they did with great gusto. For a few moments I felt too much amused to think of prayers; but, recollecting myself, I too entered the church and joined the prayers, conscious of a great thankfulness that that Mrs.
Perkins was not my mother-in-law, nor did she resemble her in the least."

Look out for colds. About this time look out for colds. The change of weather, when it comes, is likely to be sudden, and there will be much unhealthy exposure.
Colds have an unusual tendency this season to result in pneumonia or inflammation of the lungs, a disease that has carried off a great many, but for a slight cold, might you have enjoyed a brisk walk in a room insufficiently heated, sleeping in a damp or cold bed, or going to bed before the body and feet have become sufficiently warm; are among the most common methods of exposure. All these can easily and should be vigilantly guarded against.

A lady correspondent, who assumed to know how boys ought to be trained, writes as follows: Oh, mothers! I don't see the soft, tender, gentle side of your boy's nature.
Mothers often do—with an old maid.
"Stove lusters when mixed with turpentine had applied in the usual manner is blacker, more glossy and enduring than when mixed with any other liquid." Applied to an old rusty stove it will make it look like new.
