Phnyngfrs. What is nothing? A fool's stocking without a leg.

Winged Merchants—Bees, because they sell their honey. The early risers now-a-days are the thermometer and the house fly.

When a physician deserts his profession for the pulpit the inference is that he can preach better than he can practice.

"Is the moon made of green cheese, youngster?" "No, sir, certainly not." "How do you prove that?" "Oh, easy—the moon was made before the cows."

A shrewd old Yankee said he didn't believe there was any downright cure for laziness in a man.

"Is that a friend of yours?" asked a gentleman, pointing towards a party who was sailing rapidly down the street.

A colored preacher, in translating to his hearers the sentence, "The harvest is over, the season is ended, and thy soul is not saved," put it: "Do corn has been cribbed, dere slip's any more work, and de debil is still foolin' wid dis community."

The standard of drunkenness varies considerably between London and Edinburgh. A witness in a London court testified that "a man is properly drunk when he cannot walk."

In an examination of an Irish case for assault and battery, counsel on cross-examining the witness, asked him what they had at the place they stopped at.

A lady friend and myself, last Sunday evening, went to bed. With a sudden spring the old lady bounced him out of the house.

"I was about to say," commenced the young man, "that a lady friend and myself went to bed."

When a thrust from the old man's cane started him back several feet, upon which he exclaimed at the top of his voice.

A London journal remarks: "When fruit does harm, it is because it is eaten at improper times, in improper quantities, or before it is ripened or fit for the human stomach."

An indiscreet person is like an unsealed letter, which every one may read, but which is seldom worth reading.

"Circumstances alter cases," says a Scotch lawyer to an old farmer client. "Verra true, sir," replied the farmer, "and cases alter circumstances as well."
