Modern Old Masters. A Queer Branch of Art in Italy

Green the Boston Advertises ?

A few days since some remarks were made touching the matter of the forgery by imitation of modern masters, and a few more words relative to the forgety of the old man-ters may be not without interest. There are forgeries of this latter soft so well executed that even experts have failed to detect them. There are probably in many famous galleries pictures claiming to be by the best hands, about which, if even a breath suspicion be whispered, no exposure and condemnation have followed. A most striking illustration of this skilful deception drew general attention some thirty years ago at florence. The case was a little peopliar, at confrontation was difficult. There is now in the Pitil gallory the famous Madonna and child by Raphesl of the grand duke, so-called because it was secluded in his private spartment. Bartelini, the court sculptor, and a man so celebrated that Napoleon had put the sculpture he stole from Italy under his charge in the Louvre, publicly inrited all Florence to examine and admire in his rooms the real original of the grand duke. It was visited and admired, and few cared to dispute its genuineness under Bartolini's overshadowing authority. People admired
