An African Potentate. King John of Abyssinia—A Troubled Reign—Resistance to Egyptian Interference—How Affairs Stand Now. If the Cairo despatches are correct in asserting that King John has been successful in his mission to the King of Abyssinia, and that the latter renounces his claims on Masowah, accepting instead a more southerly outlet to the sea, a dispute has been settled which threatened war between Egypt and Abyssinia like the one of three years ago. Ever since his accession to the throne, the successor of the hapless King Theodore has been involved in trouble with the late Khedive of Egypt, in consequence of the latter's ambition to add to his domains on the north and southwest, and to extend his sway over as much as possible of Central Africa. CROWNED UNDER ENGLISH AID As John of Ethiopia, he soon found Ismail Pasha imploring the reorganized Egyptian army, with its English and American auxiliaries, to penetrate and occupy the country of the Bogos, which had been under the control of the Sultan. The earlier plans followed were those of Sir Samuel Baker; after whom came Col. Gordon, who had also been successful in his operations in China by putting down a formidable rebellion. Gen. Stoen, Col. Long, and other American officers were of great service in the early part of the expedition. Satisfied with these acquisitions, Mansour Pasha, a German, who had been made viceroy of Masowah, took possession of the country of the Bogos, which King John claimed as a part of Abyssinia. The result of this kind of movement was that King John was forced to retreat. ACCEPTED THE CASE OF BATTLE with the Egyptian army, relying on its new organization of modern tactics, and its modern arms and munitions, and the modern King John overhauled and almost destroyed the parts of it which he came in contact. THE FIRST EXPLOIT OF KING JOHN was to fall upon the invading command of Mansour, said to have been about 2,000 strong. It was crushed by the hands of King John, who was aided by a force of 1,000 and 2,000 strong, supplied with artillery, was sent against Abyssinia early in 1878, under command of Col. Ardenbury, an accomplished officer, and a staff of European and American officers, including Gen. Long as second in command. As MANASSAH, an English officer, who, with Gordon, had gained credit for suppressing the rebellion of 1863, but who had taken service on the Abyssinian side several years ago, sent word to King John to restore his country to the power of the Emperor of Abyssinia. King John had since obtained, in a letter sent to London, that Kirkham was poisoned by the Emperor (for history is not clear) until he died in the following autumn.
