THE FREE PRESS. ACTON, THURSDAY, DEC. 23, 1880. POETRY. Christmas is Coming.

Christmas is coming! Christmas is coming! The children all know it will quickly be here.

Attention being called, the Colonel in a voice clear, cold and inflexible, proceeded to read the finding of the court-martial.

CHAPTER V. TEMPTATION FOR THE TIME TRIUMPH. The eve of the long expected gala day had at length come.

CHAPTER VI. The eve of the long expected gala day had at length come.

CHAPTER VII. The eve of the long expected gala day had at length come.

CHAPTER VIII. The eve of the long expected gala day had at length come.

CHAPTER IX. The eve of the long expected gala day had at length come.

ried into effect that morning, on the favorite of the regiment.

The officers gathered about Colonel Westerland, who, seated grim and unmoved upon his gray charger, gave the necessary orders to the adjutant.

Colonel Westerland though evidently affected, gave no outward sign of emotion, but sat his horse as calmly as though the present proceedings were but a part of the general review.

"Silence in the ranks," shouted the Colonel. Shall the feat of justly merited punishment provoke a rejoinder from my men?

"Officers and men of the 106th, you all know that I deeply regret the occasion for which we are assembled this holiday morning.

Drummers do your duty! "Hold drummers!" said the little man from the carriage.

An exchange says:—"An editor's business is to write editorials, grind out poetry, sort and re-write communications.

George Henderson, leaped to the ground, still shouting, "Hold on! for God's sake hold on!"

ground, still shouting, "Hold on! for God's sake hold on!"

The confusion attendant upon this unlooked for interruption having for a moment subsided, George Henderson, almost breathless from his exertions to be heard, continued: "Thank God I am not too late to prevent this great evil!"

"I am certainly glad, my fine fellow, that you have made a clean breast of this affair, and prisoner, I am truly glad for your sake that the money is found.

Drummers do your duty! "Hold drummers!" said the little man from the carriage.

An old down-east farmer came home drunk the other night, and became the victim of an irresistible desire to get still drunker.

"No; did ye ever do it yerself?" asked the witness quite early.

"Yes," said the counsel, with an absent air, but watching his opportunity for a thrust.

"Haven't I lost the record? Whose record?" "Samson's," returned the witness calmly.

Christmas Eve. Christmas again, but the sad heart aches With its burden and weight and care.

Bright were the days, in the years gone by, From the dawn till the sunset glow There was always coming some happy thought.

Of the boy—oh we loved him so! Now we were plotting some glad surprise, Always something was being done.

He was the captain of all the host - Of the boys at school or play, "Lord in his praise the world will sing."

Christmas Day. Christmas day has always been associated with rejoicing. Unlike nearly all other Christian festivals, it commemorates a birth, not a death.

That Christmas day should be made a time for special rejoicing for children, strikes us as an entire keeping with its character.

In a moment every shako and hat was off and three roving British cheers were sent skyward for the Colonel's daughter.

Upon the restoration of order in the ranks, Colonel Westerland, visibly affected, though struggling violently to suppress it, was again heard.

Drummers do your duty! "Hold drummers!" said the little man from the carriage.

An old down-east farmer came home drunk the other night, and became the victim of an irresistible desire to get still drunker.

"No; did ye ever do it yerself?" asked the witness quite early.

"Yes," said the counsel, with an absent air, but watching his opportunity for a thrust.

"Haven't I lost the record? Whose record?" "Samson's," returned the witness calmly.

The subsequent queries put to that witness were remarkable for their brevity.
