OUR STORY TRLLES. A DELUDED BANKER DE-TEOTIVE.

Not a great many months ago, it COLORED GULD BROCHES AND said, although I cannot vouch for the truth of the story, a carriage drove up before one of the most palatial Chicago's hotels, and but of it got a certain gentleman whom I will call Mr. Barker, the junior pattner of a loca banking firm. He was also a wellknown man of the world, and was warmly received by the clerks of the hotel, and, as it was dinner time, was ushered into the dining room.

SAVAGE'S Mr. Barker appeared to be in especially good humor, and chatted a Wyndham St., Guelph while with the clerk. In the course of the convergation he asked whether a gentleman named Viscount Fleury from Paris, had not arrived the previous day, and in order to aid the clerk in recognizing him he added that he had a very military air. The question was Would intimate to the people of Actor that he has purchased the butcher business late-ly carried on by Edbert Storey, and that he has always on hand a first class stock of immediately answered in the affirmative. The banker said that he would like very much to make the acquaint ance of the gentleman, and the clerk and hopes by strict attention to business to ordered the head waiter to reserve a public. MEAT delivered at any lime to any place for Mr. Barker at the Frenchman's

The banker had hardly taken his seat when the gentleman for whom he was inquiring, a tall, finely formed person, stepped into the room.

Without paying attention to the banker, he sat down at the table near After soup was through with Mr. Bauker made some incidental How Lost, How Restored remarks. The viscount was the dangerous use of internal medicines or the use of the knife; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple certain and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter Frenchman, and the conversation natwhat his condition may be, may cure himself cheapty, privately and radically.

You are Infitt, cushier of the firm of L. T. & Co., bankers, of San Francisco, and these securities which you have here in your pocketbook represent money stolen from your

"You must be out of your senses, said the Frenchman. "Ether give me back these papers which you have taken from me like a robber, or I will make an alarm."

"Just as you choose," said the banker; "only I want to say that there are officers in citizens' clothing in that office, and that I am something of a detective myself. Mr. T.; of the firm you have robbed, is an old school friend of mine. Since he knew that you would, of course, keep out of the way of every one with whom you had business relations, he applied to me, sent me a fall and complete description of you, and told me all that it was necessary for me to know. In fact, it is not to the credit of your shrewdness that you permitted yourself to be begged so easily. Your arrival here was discovered this morning, and it would not have taken half a detective to have picked you up anywhere; and now, my dear Laffitt, or Viscount Fleury, if you prefer that title, you are

In the meantime Mr. Barker looked over the contents of the pocket book and found them all right. Then his eyes rested upon the unhappy Frenchman. The sight touched him, and he said, with more warmth than the scamp

I am authorized to pay you ten thousand dollars. Here is your money in bills. Take it and try to earn your living honestly. I give you, ih my own name, and that of my ald friend, your former employer, the assurance that nobody shall ever know anything commrning your misconduct."

Tears flowed down the cheeks of the unmasked swindler. He pressed M Barker's hand warmly, and, since he had apparently lost his desire to see the gayer side of life as it is to be seen in Chicago, he burried from the bank.

The banker Barker was delighted at having performed his mission so well, yourself by trying to be odd: and could not resist inviting all the officers and clerks of the bank about him, to explain how very shrewd and keen he had been, and how very no man looks as mean as he feels. brilliant a detective he would make. urally turned on the gaver things of about the good success which had then don't tell it until the other wointerest in Chicago, a subject better attended his efforts, and placed the man has told you as good a story. calculated than any other to bring securities which he had received at the Don't sar you don't care when you young men, as they both were, closer i disposition of L., T. & Co.; when that are doing your best to keep from carhouse informed him by return mail ing and can't. - After dinner the two had a bottle of that they knew nothing about Laffitt "Mumm" and a cigar. A WORD TO MOTHERS

Written for the Free Press.

We hear a great deal of advice to mothers upon the subject of fitting their daughters to become good, industrious, prudent wives, but not a word about fitting their sons to become kind, con siderate husbands.

A good wife is indeed essential to domestic peace and harpiness, but a good husband is equally so, for how can a woman be a model wife who has a peevish unressonable tyrauical hus band, always faultfinding and holding matter is simple enough: his mother up as a paragon of perfection.
