TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 17, 1881.

OUR CHILDREN.

Some are little darlings;
Bursting into bloom;
Blessing by their sweetness
All within the room.
Others, like roses,
Hiding 'neath the green;
Pluck one for a memory—
Never seen even.
All, our Father's flowers;
Planted by his hand;
Let us watch and guide them
To the better land.

Students.

Do not think because you have graduated, that there is nothing more to be learned. Thus far your eyes have been closed to all save what is found in books. Open them now, and, looking around you, see for yourself what other things this life holds in store. A good student is one to the end of his day.

Paying Mother Back.

If you can do nothing else to help your mother, you can give her a smile and an "I love you." And any child who refrains from doing this, is un-deserving of a good mother. It is very easy to use a mother, and to mis-treat her, too; and to make her our daily drudge, waiting for recompence until we get old enough to "pay back," is unfair, as long as we daily have the power to make just that payment—a true mother loves best—appreciation.

Lost in a Whisky Barrel.

Here is a story of a man whose life might be truthfully called a failure. He was earnestly looking into the lung-hole of a whisky barrel, as if in search of something he could not find.

"What are you doing?" asked a bystander.

"Why, I'm seeking my character in the place I lost it," was the mournful reply.

That's a bad place in which to lose one's character; yet many a man has lost it in a whisky barrel.

Learn to Say No.

If a man makes a request of you which you cannot grant, tell him no at once. Don't deceive him. It may make him have unpleasant feelings to ward you at first, but he will surely respect your straightforwardness. We know a man who tried the "no" business. He said it worked all right up to the "unpleasant feeling" part, but he did not wait long enough for the "subsequent respect" to operate, as the other fellow said he had been put off long enough, and if the bill wasn't settled in ten minutes he would receipt it by threatening the ever-lasting light out of him.

Bob's Plan.

Bob never has any trouble with the boys. Every one likes him; so it is not very strange that he gets along well.

"Bob, how is it that you never get into any scrapes?" said Will Law to him one day. "All the other boys do."

"Oh, it's my plan not to talk back. When a boy says hard things to me I just keep still."

Not a bad plan, is it? If all the boys would try it, what good times there would be in the school room, on the play-ground—everywhere. Who will try Bob's plan?

Judge Hale's Liberty.

"What's that crowd for, I wonder?" said Charlie Peck, as he and his older brother Ben were walking out near the railroad track one evening after supper.

"We'll go and see," Ben said; and they hurried toward the spot where quite a number of men had collected a pile of ties.

"O, it's only some tramp," they heard a man say, as they approached. "Not much tramp," exclaimed another who had been nearer to the tie pile than the first speaker. "It's Judge Hale, drunker than a fool. He's laying there dead drunk, and the two police just found on him $3,000 in cash, and some checks that will foot up $2,000 more. They'll take care of the money for him till he gets sober."

"It's lucky for him that some sticky fingered crook didn't find him first, if he had all that money about him," said the first. "This would have been a costly sput for him. He'd better lock up his money before he looks upon the wine when it is red, again."

"That's what Judge Hale calls liberty, I suppose," said Ben, with a look of disgust, as he and Charlie turned away. "He said the other night that he'd never entail his personal liberty by signing a pledge; but it seems he'll run the risk of entailing his life to the amount of $5,000 by one drunken spree. May we be delivered from such 'judges' as he is!"

And so we leave men to vote.

for such note!" exclaimed Charlie.

"Perhaps they won't," when the present Uncle's are the voters," said Ben, with a smile.

A Good Thing to Know.

Professor Hermann, the wonderful magician, known throughout the world for his skill, used St. Jacobs Oil for a severe attack of rheumatism in the shoulder, and was cured by it. His customers St. Jacobs Oil a valuable preparation.

Many people make drug shops of their stomachs, in the attempt to relieve a simple attack of liver complaint, when with a dose or two of Dr. Thomas' Eclectic Oil the complaint might easily and pleasantly obtain. Colic, piles, harts, corns, lame back and swollen neck, are among the troubles which it cures.

Manufacturers of Reapers, Mowers, and Threshing Machinery, prefer "Castorine Machine Oil" to any other. It will wear hard, seat and elephant, and is warranted not to gum.

"Friendship" Cicero says, "is the only thing in the world concerning the use of which all mankind are agreed," but all writers agree that a good pen is adidemur, and Esterbrook's will be found to be A 1.

Prescribed by the leading Physicians throughout the Dominion, in their regular practice. Maltopepsin is also used to a large extent in Hospitals, Dispensaries and Infirmarys.
