The Midnight Train Across the dull and breeding night A giant flice with demon light. And beeath of wreathing amoke :
Around him whirf the realing plain,
And with a dash of dim disdain, He cleares the mindered rock.

In lonely swamps the low wisd'stirs
The belt of black funereal firs.
That murmur to the sky.
Still, startled by his mad career.
They seem to keep a hush of fear As if a god swept by.

Through many a dark, wild heart of boath O'er booming bridges, where beneath A mighty river brawis; By ruins, remnants of the past. Their ivies trembling in the blast ; By singing waterfalls.

The slumb'rer on his silent bed Turns to the light his loadly head, Divested of its dream; Long loagues of gloom are hurried o'er Through tannel sheaths, with iron roar, And shrill night-rending acream.

Past huddling buts, past flying farms.
High fermace flames, whose erimson arms
Are grappling with the night.
He tours along receding lands g
To where the kingly city stands.
