He was better company than any boy I knew, and Saturday was the dullest day of the week, for instead of coming home at three o'clock in the afternoon, as he usually did. he was absent all the day and most of the evening, for the money for the hands was to be got from the bank at ____, and many little things arranged for the coming Monday. If grandfather took me with him, that was another thing. I enjoyed mightily. But grandmother sometimes retoed that, and I stayed at home. One Saturday morning I jumped out bed, hopeful and happy, to find, to my great disappointment, that grandfather was already gone away in the waggon. I had speezed two or three times the night before, and had in consequence been credited with a cold, and it had been decided that I should stay at home. I was so greatly dis-
