YOUNG FOLES CORNER.

We Are Not Missed.

If you shall Today should
The birds would sing the same to-morrow.
The verbal spring.
The doves would bring.
And few would think of us with sorrow.
Yes, it is so.
Would they be cast?
The corn would grow, the grass yield hay,
And cattle low.
An autumn's shade.
And few would need us pass away.
How soon we pass!
How few, alas!
Remember those who turn to mold
Whose faces lie.
With a summer's shade,
Beneath the golden churchyard soil.

Yet it is so.
We come and go;
They shall be born; they, whom we dead;
A day or more.
The winter is over.
Another takes our place instead.

How Few Children Sing.

It is very strange that so few children are heard singing about the streets, or even in their own homes, while in all old story books there is always a child excelling at work or play. This change for the worse is probably due to the erroneous impression some parents have that it is injurious to train a child's voice in singing, yet children use their voices in crying, laughing, calling and talking, and they don't want out.

Any one who has heard an infant choir at Christmas eve in the Sunday school entertainment must realize what exquisitely the childish voice is capable of.

The greatest living singer, Patti, was as eminent a child as at the present time, and travelled the world over singing to hearts. Good voices are not unusual, but good training is. There is but one right use of voice, and when only the right muscles are trained properly for the production of pure strong tones, distinct and clear, is the result, and steadily growing, of a constant use to purity and strength.
