DUR YOUNG FOLKS.

THE LITTLE PLEADER.

She came to me, my baby girl. In lender accouts pleading. Her little dimpled fingers clasped. Het blue eyes interceding! While tears of grief run down her check

The grief she could not smother. As catching my uplifted arm She cried, "Don't punish brother!"

"I'm fast as sure as austhing He never mount to do it; For Bob is such a nice, NICE boy-I thought Mamma you knew it." So Hob was spared, the sly young rogue. And both tripped off together, While great rejoicings took the place

Of tears and storing weather. And so it was in after life That sister shielded brother. And stood twirt him and present harm As never did another! A gentle, patient love that sought

For self no answering favor; But took, with sweet submissiveness The tokens that he gave her-We never knew HIS love to HISH Till brave Rob lost his sister-Till Mollie's welding bells rang out.

And he in sadness missed her. Ah! then we saw how good had been The influence she had o.er him. And how her bright example helped To light the path before him. Oh! sisters who have brothers dear. Wild reguish old or clever.

Oh! deem it not a sacrifice To put forth strong endeaver To keep them in the narrow way That leads to purest pleasures; And lend your aid that they may find. When seeking, priceless treasures:
