TUESDAY MORNING APRIL 24, 1884.

THE BIRTHDAY.

Baby came this morning.
She came in the dawning light;
That in her little cradle.
Hence with the pure white.

Wraps I have and leaves,
She sleep, in dusty plain;
Still as a snow-white lily.

Little pink palm to palm.

Just a sweet rare secret.
That never any know;
Her eyes are folded together,
Like leaves of the budding rose.

Only a pink
The pink lesson cleaves;
But we know the rose in there
With all its scented leaves.

The heart-spring hold the wine;
The wine holds the angel;
The wine holds the shrine;

The wine keeps the saint.

The mother, the tender wife;
And the love that sent her knows
The secret of her life.

Rules for the Journey of Life.

Never resent a supposed injury till you know the motives of the author of it, and on no occasion retaliate.

Never show levity when people are engaged in worship.

Never think worse of another on account of his differing from you in political and religious subjects.

Always take the part of an absent person, who's censured in company, so far as truth and propriety will allow.

Not to dispute with a man who is more than seventy years of age, nor with a woman, nor with any sort of an enthusiast.

To speak with calmness and deliberation on all occasions, especially of circumstances which titillate.

Not to effect to be witty, or to joke as to hurt the feelings of another.

To say as little as possible of yourself and those who are near you.

To act at cheerfulness without levity.

Never to court the favor of the rich by flattering the vanities of their riches.

Frequently to review your conduct and note your feelings.

Value of a Cat.

A short time since a poor Irishman applied at the church warden's office at Manchester for relief, and upon some doubt being expressed as to whether he was a proper object for parochial relief, he enforced his suit with much earnestness. "Och ye honor," said he, "I am 'eard to be starved long since but for my cat."

"But for what?" asked the astonished interlocutor.

"My cat," replied the Irishman.

"Your cat how so?"

"Shure, yer honer, I sold her eleven times for sixpence a time, and she was always at home before I got there myself."

How They Do It.

A sturdy son of Scotia was disconcerting sweet music on his national instrument when a couple of little girls who had been listening to the melodious sounds thus expressed themselves: "Do you know," said the elder, a young lady of apparently about ten or eleven summers, "why it is that the Scotch always win all the battles they fight?" "No, Benny," said her little friend, "why do they?" "Well," replied the first speaker, "it's not the shot that they use, but it's the surprises which frighten the enemy away."

Twice ten are six of us,
Six are but three;
Nine are but four of us;

What can it be?

Would you know more of us?

I'll tell you more;

Seven are but five of us,

Five are but four.
