OUR STORY.

AUNT REBECCA'S GHOST.

"I dou't believe a word of it!" said

Aunt Rebecca. The wine-like glow of sunset yet illumined the great bay window; but the rest the apartment was already shrouded i the gray shadows of twilight, in whose misty indistinctness the bage chairs of carved oak looked like gigantic momsters from some foreign shore. From the walls frowned down dark old family portraits, and the crimson hangings above the arched doors waved restlessly back and forth in the dranghte of wind that swept through the vast corridor. "I don't believe a word of it I" repeated

Aunt Rebecca, with more emphasis than before. "A ghost story, indeed !"

"Tell me about it. Violet." said young Hazlewood, to whom the deep bay-window with its far-off prospect of snowy hills, veiled in gathering twilight, to say nothing of pretty Violet Orme's close vicinage were infinitely more attractive than the more modern regions of Alnwick Place.

"It is not much of a story," said Violet, flushing up to her very eyelashes at the sound of her own sweet voice, "only years ago, long before my great grandpa built this house, the site was all one unbroken wood, and there was a tradition that a beautiful girl was murdared by her lover. Her grave, they said, was beneath the foundations of the house; but I scarcely credit this part of the legend,"

"Of course not," interrupted Miss . becca, with a toes of her false curis. have no patience with the relics of superstition."

"What are you looking for, aunt? Have you dropped anything? Shall I call for Harris to bring a candle?" asked Violet, moment afterwards; coming to her aunt's was the final verdict hurled at Col. Orme,

"Nothing, nothing," said Miss Rebecca with a little embarrassment in her voice. "Come-don't stay here any longer in the bitting cold, unless you both want a week's medicine and doctor's visita."

"It's not cold, Anni Rebecca," pleaded Violet, " and the startisht to so beautiful on the stone pavement. Just let us wait a "Schulbes was disable discuss, take their your and Lady disable will. At least, so they seemed to Charles Haslewood as he stood in the deep recess of the gigantic bay-window, nearly hidden by the curtains, the faded splendor of whose tarnished embroidery carried the mind unconsciously a century backward on the stream of time.

The tall, old-fashioned clock in the hall was striking twelve, and the colony of crickets under the warm hearth:stone were falling into a dreamy, sleepy sort of a chirp, when Aunt Rebecce emerged from her door, treading on tiptoe, and carrying a pre-possessing of the two. Probably some such consciousness swept across the good spinster's brain, for she shuffled with accelerated rapidity past the solemn eyes of the grave old family portraits on the wall. "I am sure I dropped them somewhere here," she murmured, pausing in front of Then home, by lone path, cross-cut and old | the bay-window. "How provoking! There goes my candle out! But I believe I can find them, however, the starlight is bright. Mercy upon us! What is that?

The house was aroused into instantaneous commotion, lights flashed into bright ness at the various doors, and an eager circle of enquirers surrounded Aunt Rebecca, who evinced strong symptoms of an intention to go into hysterics.

"It clided past me like a gust of wind she shricked, replying at hazards to th questions rained upon ber-" all in white with that dreadful mark of blood upon its throat! It's a warning -I know it's a warning that I haven't long to live! Oh, what shall I do-what shall I do?"

"But I don't understand what you were doing out in the Ghost's Corridor at this time of night," interrupted Col. Orme staring at his sister as if not quite certain whether this were an actual occurrence in real life, or merely a fragmentary part of his last dream.

"Well, if you must know," said Miss Rebecca, with a little hysteric sob. " dropped my false teeth there, just at:dmk and I didn't like to look for them there, with Violet and Capt. Haslewood standing by, and so-and so-"

"Oho! that's it, eh ?" said Col. Orme, aughing. "Upon my word, Sister Backy you are rather over-particular for a woman fifty years old." "Only forty-nine, James," interrupted

Miss Rebecca, with a shrill accent of in "But the ghost ?" inquired young Hanlewood, who had just arrived on the scene of action, with rather a flushed brow and em-

And he went, chuckling, to inquire after his sister's health. There is no evidence that he ever did betray Violet's secret ; but two things may be regarded as settled fact in the records of Alnwick Place-one that Aunt Rebecca strenuously denies the existence of ghosts, and abhors the very sight of her niece's white mantle with cherry trimmings; the other is, that she i particularly careful never to pass through the solemn old haunted hall after sunset.

Weight of Milk.

A great many little things are constantly passing before our eyes that most of us fail to notice. Every one who eats apples knows that they contain seeds, but not everyone who cate apples can tell whether the seeds of the apples as they lie in their little seed cases or "hulls," lie with their small end r large end towards the stem of the apple. We have heard the question asked repeatedly in large congregations of apple eaters, without bringing out half a dozen correct answers, the large majority appearing among the number who do not pretend to know, while of those who thought they knew, more usually voted wrong than right. Most persons, propably, know as much about milk as they do about apples, and perhaps one ought not to be surprised that in a mixed gathering there might be a diference of opinion concerning so simple thing as milk. Yet we were hardly prepar ed to find, upon a recent occasion, where number of farmers were discussing the milk question, that scarcely one could tell for a certainty which of the two liquids, milk or water, was the heaviest, while of those who thought they knew, the larger number were in the wrong. Because milk contains fat, which is lighter than either water or milk, many think that the milk itself must be lighter than water. Probably, very few farmers ever took the trouble to weigh a gallon of either water or milk to ascertain their weights or difference. The difference is comparatively slight, though varying socording as the milk is rich or poor in the several milk solids. Take a years! that will hold exactly 100 pounds of pure water, and fill it with pure milk of avecase quality, and the weight will be found to be about 103 pounds. In other words milk is 8 per cent. heavier than water. Mr. O. S. Bliss, who is good authority on no soles. dairy matters, gives, in a recent letter to the Rural New Yorker, the specific gravity of pure milk, as found by many tests, to be 1.032. The standard gallon of pure milk, taken at a temperature of 60°, is now gen erally understood to weigh 8.6 pounds, or 2.15 pounds per quart. By this rule ten quarts of pure milk at a temperature of 60° will weigh just 211 pounds, which are easy figures to remember, and from which it casy to reckon the number of quarts given by a cow after finding the number of pounds by weighing. A good many owners of large militars have come to reckon two pounds of milk as a quart, which is wrong and mis-
