THE EDITOR. The editor sits in his easy chair, He doesn't look easy though he's there. .

His forehead is high, he has scanty hair, And his brow is deeply furrowed by care; And oft there floats upon the air A very subdued editorial swear, For few can tell, or, indeed, few care What the editorial mind must bear.

The editor sharpens his pencil tip, And he writes his copy slip after slip: Then he sends his "devil" off on a trip To composing room, and says "now nip." His fillers he then commences to clip. And the brush in paste-pot goes dip, dip, And he'll write an electoral whip; For oh, you must know, the editor's flip.

The editor's work is never done, He works from rise till set of sun : He's there at A.M., which meaneth One. And the outside public thinks it's fun. His mind is ever on the run, And his brain must almost weigh a ton; Yet withal, he's a jovial son of a gun, Tho' the editor's lot's not a happy one.

Florence Nightingale on Cholera Plain Views on the Prevention of the

In reply to an inquiry, Miss Florence Nightingale, the Crimean heroine; sends the following from Paris to the New York Herald :-

Sir. - I beg in reply to your notes asking for "practical advice in view of the rapid spread of cholers."

That our whole experience in India, where cholers is never wholly absent, tends het own work." to prove-nay, actually does prove-that cholers is not communicable from person to person.

That the disease cannot be ascribed to somebody else," that is, that the sick do not manufacture a "special poison" which causes the disease.

. That cholers is a local disease epidemic affecting localities, and there depending on pollution of earth, air and water and buildings.

That the isolation of the sick cannot stop the disease, nor quarantine, nor cordons, nor the like. These, indeed, may tend fatally to aggravate the disease, directly or indirectly, by turning away our attention from the only measures which can stop it: earth, air and water and buildings into a comfort.
