

Acton Free Press.

Oh! what a beautiful thing,
Covering, hiding the forehead so fair,
Warning young men of that girl to beware.
See it disgrace the head of a child,
Spilling her features so fresh and so mild,
Cut with the hidden clip down to the eye,
Leaving her brows an affair of mystery.
Plenty of charms has the sweet little girl,
Eyes of clear azure and teeth of pure pearl,
Yet we must ask, of her husband's fair,
"Is she a damsel, or is she an ape?"
See her grown sister, her hands all in curls, Desiring hark at the most lovely girl,
Making that bang with such exquisite care,
Look like a plaster or poultice of hair.
Young fellows stare at such girls as they stop,
Not to admire, but to quiz their make-up,
Saying with assurance quiet but deep,
"Make-up ought to be plenty and cheap!"
Grandmother, too, must come out with a bang,
Nearly as bad as the rest of the gang,
Hiding the forehead that grand old dame,
Under a frizz that she borrows or hires.
Why should our women, the lords of our hearts,
Make themselves frightful by hideous arts?
Why should they cover their foreheads so "fair."
Worse than the male folk who plaster their hair?
Surely the serpent bequeathed us a fane,
Let it in the garden and know as a fane,
Let it depart and by no means Ways may the beautiful make themselves hideous.

TO-MORROW.
"You'll come to-morrow then," light words lightly said.
Gaily she waved her little hand, gaily she bared his head.
"You'll come to-morrow then," and the man on his errand went,
With a tender prayer in heart and lip, yet on his work intent.
The woman a moment lingered, 'twould he turn for a parting look,
These words half a smile and half a sigh, her household burden took.
"You'll come to-morrow then," and when the words lightly said, Pale lips in the crowded city, of the "railway accident" spoke;
A strong man in a stranger's home, in death's dread quiet lay,
And a woman sobbed a full heart out in a cottage a mile away.

TO-MORROW.
The ground was duly broken up and harrowed by Eph Boyers and his yoke of oxen, and after a little more help from Eph himself with the spade and hoe, Miss Celosia got to her planting.
The first pink rays of sunlight never caught her napping. She had her breakfast over by daylight, and long before sunrise she was at work in her "truck patch."
And she was in hard work, and in spite of her most indefatigable efforts, the spots would slip in here and there among her crops; and the fox-tail grass persisted in growing faster than cucumbers and squashes.
