OUR LIFE. Tell all the world the Lord is risen-The Easter message, ever new : The grave is but a ruined prison-Invisible, the life breaks through.

Earth cannot long ensepulcher In her dark depths the timest seed ; When life begins to throb and stir, The bands of death are weak indeed. No clods its upwards course deter ; Calmly it makes its pathy to-day;

Than a whole universe of clay. Yet not one leaf blade was stirred, Bursting earth's wintry dungeous dim, But lived at His creative word, Responsive to the life in Him.

One germ of life is mightier

Since, then, the life that He bestows, Thus triumphs over death and earth; What power of earth or death can close The fountain whence all life has birth

That light the victory shall gain. That death is weak, and life is strong. so with immortal vigor rife, . The loveliest life that faith has freed, Bears witness still that Christ is life, And that the life is risen indeed.

OUR STORY.

The Telegraphic Signal.

John Mills, the hero of this sketch, was a and the lantern dropped from her nerveless railroad engineer, and had been for a long hand. whom and the engineer there had sprung approach? up a mutual attachment, and whenever "59" came along Kate generally managed to be at the door and exchange signals with her lover. One day the train was detained at the whistle it occurred to her that she might teach John to sound her name in the Morse telegraphic characters, so that she | the President, taking her hand. could distinguish his signal from that of the other engines whenever his train approached. The plan worked to a charm, and far and near the whistle shrieked

K-a-t-e, until one day, as the operator stepped upon the platform, she overheard a conversation between two young men, and learned that they understood the signal, and were laughingly wondering who Kate could be. Their means of communication having thus been discovered they were It is not severe, and I'll sit up." obliged to discontinue it. In the meantime. Kate had, by means of the telegraph, made acquaintance of a young lady, an the room. How did she know it? Kate found an opportunity to acquaint John with | lision. the proposed plan, and in the meantime had found an abandoned wire which ran for a long distance close to the track, and which she proposed to use for carrying out her urpose. Thanksgiving Day came soon after, and John fortunately having a holiday, he and Kate went bravely to work, and before the day had ended the task was completed, and proved a complete success. The dramatic finale of their love episode is told in the following sketch: It was very singular how absent-minded and inattentive the operator was on the day that the great scientific enterprise was finished. No wonder she was disturbed. Would the new line work? . Would her little battery be strong enough for such a great circuit? Would John be able to close it? The people began to assemble for the train. The clock pointed to the hour for its arrival.

Suddenly, with startling distinctness, the bell rang clear and loud in the echoing room. With a cry of delight she put on her dainty hat and ran in haste out upon the platform. The whistle broke loud and clear on the cool, crisp air, and "53" appeared around the curve in the woods. The splendid monster slid swiftly up to her feet and

But the happy moments sped, and " 59 groaned and slowly departed, while Kate stood on the platform, her face wreathed in smiles and white steam. So the lovers met each day, and none kissed away the happy tears that covered Ontario and of the county of Lanark: We knew how she was made aware of his approach with such absolute certainty. Sci-

With affrighted face she burst from her office and brushed through the astonished people and out upon the snow-covered platform. There stood the directors' train upon the track of the oncoming engine. "The conductor! Where is he? sir, start, start! Get to the siding! express! The express is coming!"! With a cry she snatched a lantern from
