-Huron Signal. As we went to press last week came sad tidings of the death of Mrs. (Rev.) Cookman, which took place at her home Waterdown on Tuesday. The esteemed lady was a daughter of Asa Hall, Esq., and sister of Mrs. James Brown, of this place, and was so well known by every one that any remarks by us respecting her would seem out of place. o the editor of the FREE PRESS. The writer, in company with the genial and energetic proprietor of the Metropolitan Studio, took a most enjoyable little trip out into the country the other day, for the purpose of taking some reported charming views, said views, of which more anon, we found equal to report. We left the slumbering village of Acton at the rather carly hour of 4 a.m. Of course no one was up at that unearthly hour, but we did see at an upper window of the residence of one of our charming belles the blind drawn slightwhile breakfast -was being prepared we took a stroll around the village to pick out | 27

Breakfast over-to which we may hardly say we did ample justice-we proceeded to business. Our first shots were taken at the village from the summit of what we were informed is termed "Vinegar Hill"so called, we presume, because of the total lack of that fluid in the vicinity. Next we tackled the store of the place, a large stone building, and a really superior country general store, a model of neatness, kept by . T. Mason, who is also postmaster, a most genial and popular man, who does a thriving business. Among other views taken during the day was one of the River Glen, looking south, a charming little bit of scenery, with the gently rippling curving stream, the many shades of green on bush and tree, the mossy banks, the rustic angler patiently waiting for a bite, and above all the bright blue sky flecked with fleecy clouds. Another nice view was one of the "Lovers' Walk"-what would an Eden be without a "Lover's Walk"? We got a perfect little gem in the shape of a view of the "Angler's Nook," a piscatorial retreat, with a back-ground of water tumbling over the dam, flanked by many-hued rocks, bushes and moss-covered banks and in the foreground the sparkling stream gurgling over its pebbly course, and the patient angler reclining on a rocky seat, intent on bites and perfectly indifferent as to whether he made part of our view or not.

All good things must end sometime, and so did our little jaunt to Eden, and as the day wore on we turned our steed homeward and reluctantly left the fair Eden and the Edenites behind, inwardly vowing that i would not be long ere we again paid it a visit, and regaled our eyes with views of its scenery and our inner man with Mrs. Johnston's excellent dinners.--Cor.
