OUR STORY.

How They Made Money.

"Pack up your things as soon as you please, my dear," said Mr. Chesney. We're going to move on Saturday." Mr. and Mrs. Chesney were a matrimonial firm, there was no question about that; but Mrs. Chesney had always been a silent partner. (" If ever I get married," said Elma, bright-eyed daughter of seventeen, " I won' be put upon as mamma is!" "Papa is regular despot-that's what papa is!" decided Will, a tall stripling of fifteen.)

"But," gasped Mrs. Chesney, "what o become of the children's education?" "There's a very good district school the neighborhood, not more than a mile distant," explained her husband; "and the exercise will do them good." "And what are we to do for society?" "Pshaw!" said Chesney, "I wouldn't give a rap for people who can't be society for themselves. There'll be the housewor. to do, you know-nobody keeps a girl in the country-and plenty of jobs about the place for Will and Spencer. I shall keep a horse, if I can get one cheap, for the station half a mile from the place; and I've bargained for a couple of cows and some pigs." Will and Spencer looked askance at each

" It'll do us good to walk a mile to school, muttered the elder; " but father must have a horse to carry him half a mile to the and marched into the kitchen, where his

the various advantages which were to accrue from the promised move. "It's unfortunate," said he, "that Elma and Rosie aren't boys. Such a lot of women-folks is enough to swamp any family. Men, now, can always earn their bread. But we must try to make everybody useful in some way or other. It's so healthy, you know," added he: "and the rent won't be to mamma so. Mamma would not cheat you nor anybody else. It's money that half of what we pay here." "Are there any modern conveniences we have earned ourselves. There! Now! about the place?" timidly inquired Mrs.

"There's a spring of excellent water about a hundred yards from the house."

said her husband " Have I got to walk a hundred yards for every drop of water I want?" said she. "And a large rain-water hogshead under | under the south wall. Spencer sold the the caves of the house," added Mr. Chesney. "And I've already got a bargain in kerosene lamps. As for candles, I am given to understand that the good housekeepers thereabouts make 'em themselves in the molds. There's nothing like economy. Now, I do beg to know, Abigail," he added irritably, "what are you looking so lackadnisical about? Do you expect to sit still and fold your hands, while I do all the work? Give

Between rock and swamp there was scarcely pasture for the two lean cows that Mr. Chesney had bought as "a bargain," and the hollowbacked horse which stalked about the premises like some phantom Bucephalus. " Is this home?" said Elma, with an indescribable infonation in her voice "We'll get things straightened up after a while," said Mr. Chesney; bustling to get along nicely. I wouldn't go back to the drive away the pigs, which had broken out of their pen and were squealing dismally
