Mamma was much grieved over this naughty habit of pouting, and she often talked to Daisy about it and brought her to the glass to see how ill-tempered she looked. Sometimes, too, she punished her for it, but still she could not cure the little girl. One day she thought of a new way, and and 75 cents per bottle. Sold by N determined to put it into practice the very | McGarvin next time Daisy pouted. Mamma did not say a word, but going to her paint box, she opened it and took out some black paint. Daisy watched her curiously, and when she saw mamma coming toward herewith a brush she exclaimed "What are your going to do, mamma?"

"I am going to put a black mark on your face every time you pout," answered mamself of the habit when you find that it !

be good, so I will not have to put another mark there."

For half an hour Daisy was as good as any little girl could be; then mamma asked her to run up stairs and get something for her. In a moment the sullen look came back, and again mamma got her paint brush, and a second black mark told the story of Daisy's ill-humor. By five o'clock there was six black marks on the little girl's face, and when she heard Aunt Edith's voice downstairs she ran away and hid herself, for she did not want any one to see her with those dreadful spots on her face. After Aunt Edith had gone she crept downstairs again, wishing with all her heart only half an arm. She hung her head when papa looked at the marks and asked how they had been put there, and she could not bear look up and see the grieved expression which she knew would be on his face when he heard how naughty his little girl had been. Daisy was very glad when bed came and mamma washed the black spots

" Now the ugly spots are all gone," said Daisy, smiling at herself in the glass. "Yes, they are gone from your face," answered mamma, gravely, "but you made other spots this afternoon that I canno wash away with water as I have these.

"Do you know what it is that washes all our sins away ?" " The blood of Jesus Christ," whispered

"Yes, His precious blood can wash away all the dark shains of ain and make us pure and white. Now I have washed away the black spots that marked your ill temper, but the stains will stay in your heart till you ask Jesus to forgive you and wash them away."

"I will ask Him now." And the little girl prayed earnestly for forgiveness and help in the future. Whenever after that she was tempted to pout she remembered the spots which would mark not only her face, but her heart; and she conquered her naughty habit .- Christian Intelligencer.
