

The Acton Free Press.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1887.

The Young Folks.

THE BUCKET FOR ME.

The bucket, the bucket, the bucket for me!

And so it looks a bulky brier;

Though not so heavy, think it, I'll never drink it.

He left the bucket, the bucket for me!

This is not the brier, there's wealth in the brier!

There's not the bucket that many can see,

There's not the brier, I had there's a brier!

That teaches the lesson of wisdom to me;

When I whiskey taught my wife to beg,

As often as she sat at the teat in her,

But now who's thinking when we drink?

Bright, bright brier, she thinks on the bucket and this,

The bucket is a treasure, mortal man can never

It's brier my wife's brier's an' me;

An' no room in my home, where sorrows did mine.

I'm pleasureless, a pleaser, an' gloomy's gloom;

The bucket, the bucket that keeps a man sobber, a sober, a sober, a sober to me;

He goes to his mate, man, and I brier.

Well, when you think who's feeding the tree,

It's brier, brier, brier, after every choice

now,

For the brier, brier, brier, an' me;

Well, when you think who's without a brier?

Then, brier, brier, brier, without a brier!

Peter Still,

TWO BOYS.

ON THE BRIER GROWING IN SPRING.

A poor Syrian planter boy was ploughing something shining in the autumn sun.

It attracted his eye and he stopped to pick it up.

It proved to be a silver coin, and a common possession for a Syrian boy.

Indeed, it was what you boys here would call a "rare find."

The poor boy's heart

was full of joy at his good fortune.

"Why? Because he is now able to spend at the bazaar in the next town at all!

But when his task was done, he set off for the missionary station.

He had already heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already

heard something of the Christian religion and he knew that in a book called the Bible he would find it all written out,

and a Bible he determined to have for his own.

The coin which he had picked up was

of value sufficient to pay for a Bible,

so he sold it to the missionary.

He had already