THE LITTLE MAID'S SERMON.

A little maid, in a pale blue hood,
In front of a large brick building stood.

Remember the poor! were the words she spoke.

But her hair was short and the box so high,

And she looked so sweet and so bright.

And she sang, "I'll give you a penny for the bread."

Engaged to be married, slowly uttered
There, in the middle of the street.

And in his hand she held a ring of gold.

And she said, "I'll give you a penny for the bread."

And she sang, "I'll give you a penny for the bread."

And she said, "I'll give you a penny for the bread."

And she sang, "I'll give you a penny for the bread."

And she said, "I'll give you a penny for the bread."

And she sang, "I'll give you a penny for the bread."

And she said, "I'll give you a penny for the bread."

And she sang, "I'll give you a penny for the bread."

YACANT MIND.
A group of young people sat on the porch of a farmhouse in Ohio one sultry evening this summer.

"So you made the overcoat with points?" said one.

"I like it better than round."

"Round! I like points better."

"So do I."

"I like it better than round."

"I like it better than round."

"I like it better than round."

"I like it better than round."

"I like it better than round."

"I like it better than round."

"I like it better than round."

"I like it better than round."

"I like it better than round."

"I like it better than round."

"I like it better than round."

THE LAST "GOOD-NIGHT."
"Good-night—good-night!" a silver voice
Blended with my midnight dream.

"Good-night!" broke from my answering tongue.

"Good-night!" broke from my answering tongue.

"Good-night!" broke from my answering tongue.

"Good-night!" broke from my answering
tongue.

SHE WEST ASTRAY.
Seeking after what may be found at One's Own Fire-Id.

The invalid proprietress of a wealthy estate in Scotland once visited the continent of Europe to get rid of her malady.

"Is it possible?" she replied, "why those waters are on my own estate!"
