Poetry.
THE FARMER'S WIFE.

Up with the birds in the early morning,
The dew-drops glist'ning on the grass;
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
The sun is rising in the east, and
The birds are singing in the trees.

She has never a moment to look at her
